SHORTAGE OF CARS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, several weeks ago I presented a memorial from the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas in reference to the shortage of cars, and had it printed in the RECORD, and I called the especial attention of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to the matter. So far as I know, that committee has taken no action in ref-erence to the subject. I therefore introduce a bill, which I send to the desk, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to that committee.

The bill (S. 7761) to require railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce to promptly furnish transportation for the shipment of live stock, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title,

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to hear the bill read.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Rhode Island, the Secretary will read the bill.
The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Mr. Addreich. I should like to hear the bill read.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

**Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby declared to be the duty of every merce, approved, and the property of the proper by any unavoidable accident or cause beyond the shipper's control such liability shall not apply.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of every railroad company to exchange loaded and empty stock cars used in such traffic with every other railroad forming a part of any route or with which it has joint rates for such live-stock shipments, and for each of such railroad companies to furnish to its said connecting lines as many empty cars suitable for carrying live stock as may be delivered to it loaded by such connecting carrier for the purpose of transportation over its line or to any point on its line, and to make such delivery of empty cars upon the demand of such connecting carrier within a reasonable time, to be fixed by rules and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized and empowered to make and establish all needful rules and regulations, general and special, applicable to the peculiar circumstances and conditions and to different railroads and localities and for different kinds and classes of live stock, for furnishing cars to shippers, the furnishing and the exchange and interchange of live-stock cars, loaded and empty, by such railroad companies as between each other, in order to facilitate the movement, careful, prompt, and safe handling of, and to prevent injury to, live stock in shipment, prescribing in such rules and regulations the time and manner of the furnishing and interchange of such cars, loaded and empty, and the time, place, terms, and conditions upon which such interchange shall be made and the reasonable compensation to be paid for the use of such cars or for injury or loss or destruction thereof and the length of time which it may deem reasonable in which to comply with a notice on the part of any railroad company, after reasonable demand therefor, to furnish to its connecting line within the time so specified by and in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission empty cars in lieu of loaded stock cars delivered to it by the railroad company making such demand, or the failure of any railroad company to the railroad demand or to which it is lawfully entitled, by lease or otherwise, shall render such defaulting railroad company liable to pay to the railroad making such demand $25 per day for each day's delay in furnishing or returning each car, to be recovered by suit in the circuit court of the United States in any district in which such delay or refusal shall have occurred: Provided, That no railroad company shall be required to permit its cars to go off its own

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to call the attention of the members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to the very great necessity, if they propose to consider this bill, of extending it to shipments of grain. As I heard the bill read, I think it pertains only to the shipment of live stock. I think the necessity of a law of this kind relative to the shipment of grain is much greater than it is with respect to live stock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CULBERSON. In the same connection, I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the committee a publication in the Dallas (Tex.) Times-Herald, December 9, on "The real cause of car famines," and another on "Reciprocal demurrage," to which I especially invite not only the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, but of the entire committee.

There being no objection, the paper was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SHIPPERS WANT DEMURRAGE TOO—NATIONAL ORGANIZATION NOW PROPOSES A NEW PLAN FOR RAILBOADS—WOULD STOP DELAYS—J. FARLEY, MANAGER OF THE DALLAS FREIGHT BUREAU, QUOTES FROM AMERICAN SHIPPERS' BULLETIN.

Dallas, Tex., December 8, 1906.

To the Times-Herald:

I hand you an article from the monthly bulletin for October of the American Shippers' Association, with headquarters in Chicago (of the executive committee of which I have the honor to be a member), on "The real cause of car famine," and another on "Reciprocal demurrage," which please print. This is the greatest association of freight on earth, and the whole country is taking much interest in these two subjects. It is clear there is the worst kind of bad management in the movement of freight cars. If freight cars were required by law to be furnished in two days when asked for by shippers, and then to be moved in two days, and roads were required after to move them 50 miles per day, and proper demurrage given to shippers for each day over this time, and they were allowed to deduct it from expense bills, car famines and delays in getting freight to shippers would cease. Take an instance: It is 681 miles from St. Louis to Dallas. Suppose a concern in St. Louis asked for a car for Dallas and the roads allowed two days to place it, two more to start it, and it must not be more than fourteen days in getting to Dallas, the shipper to have demurrage after eighteen days. The only trouble is the amount of demurrage the shipper should have. It should be much greater than allowed railroads, as delay on his goods may ruin him or cause him great loss of trade-or price. The commercial bodies of the whole country seem coming to a concrete conclusion that reciprocal demurrage is the only remedy for delays in freight and car famines.

J. Farley,

Manager Dallas Freight Ruseau

Manager Dallas Freight Bureau.

The article from the American Shippers' Association bulletin, referred to by Mr. Farley, is as follows:

THE REAL CAUSE OF CAR FAMINES.

"There is something wrong in the operating systems of the railroads on freight business. Car famines occur because the roads are so incredibly slow in handling their cars.

"The average freight car only 'works' during the year the equivalent of one hour in twenty-four. It spends the equivalent of twenty-three hours out of twenty-four in loafing or sleeping somewhere on siding or in yards. If the average car could only be made to 'work' two hours a day, or even an hour and a half, there would be no car famine the coming winter.

"The average car only 'works' carrying freight 15.95 miles per day, and the total distance traveled, with freight or empty, only figures 23.24 miles per day.

"(The statistical report of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, shows that the railroads had in service 1,692,194 freight cars, not including cars used by the roads for construction, etc. The total distance covered by local cars was 9,849,576,535 car miles; by empty cars, chiefly coal cars, 4,501,804,975 car miles; total, 14,353,650,056 car miles. Dividing the car mileage by the number of cars and by the number of days in the year, gives the dally averages above mentioned.)

NO SHORTAGE OF MOTIVE POWER.

No SHORTAGE OF MOTIVE FOWER.

"When the country suffers from a combination of car shortage and terminal congestion, which always come together, the railroads make the excuse that they do not have enough motive power to move the business and that the locomotive shops can not fill their orders fast enough. Official records of the Interstate Commerce Commission do not bear out this claim.

"The last full statistical report of the Commission (for 1904) shows that the roads had in service 27,029 freight locomotives, not including 7,610 switch engines. There were 1,692,194 freight cars in service, so that the roads had an average of 1 freight locomotive to 62 freight cars, not including switch engines. The roads evidently have almost enough motive power to keep in constant motion all the freight cars in the country; yet it appears that the freight cars averaged only 23.24 miles per day.

"Freight locomotives actually work only 54 miles per day hauling trains, equal to about three hours of good schedule runs. The locomotive is almost as inefficient as the car, "working' three hours out of the twenty-four and loafing or sleeping twenty-one hours. The average man engaged in business or working in a factory must put in ten hours a day, and there is no reason why freight cars and locomotives should spend so much time loafing.

Shippers Not at fault.

spend so much time loafing.

SHIPPERS NOT AT FAULT.

"Of course, the railroad man will blame it all on the shipper by claiming that the time is lost while cars are in the hands of the shipper for loading or unloading. But demurrage charges are universally enforced against shippers, so that the excuse will not hold. The average car only makes one or two trips a month, and it is in the hands of the shipper only a small portion of the total time.

"Figures have been compiled by shippers which apparently show that after a car is turned over to the road it only makes an average of 60 miles per day to destination, although nominal schedules of the railroads call for 15 to 20 miles per hour. There is something wrong.

"The freight car only earns for the road an average of $2.23 per day, but it only works one hour a day. The railroad loses money by car shortages and famines. Delays in shipment obstruct trade and make the volume of business less for both carrier and shipper. The roads can promote a greater volume of business if they will give better service. Business don't always wait for a railroad to get around. Millions of dollars of orders for merchandise are canceled in every car famine, or the goods lie unsold on the merchant's shelf until another season because they were received too late.

RAILROADS HAVE A "SOFT SNAP."

RAILROADS HAVE A "SOFT SNAP."

"A manufacturer who only operates his equipment for one hour or three hours a day would soon go into bankruptcy. In the case of a railroad it simply charges higher rates to make up for its own lack of efficiency in management.

"If the shippers of the United States would say something on this question every time they talk or write to a railroad man, they would get results. Your customers are not backward in saying things to you when you get shiftless. When there is something wrong in your business, you generally straighten it out if you hear about it often enough.

"Cooperation on the part of the shippers of the United States will correct every abuse of transportation. Here is a good opportunity to try it.

RECIPEOCAL DEMURRAGE.

"Many of the shippers of the country are coming to the conclusion that the railroad should be held responsible for failure to furnish cars when they are wanted. In Illinois a large number of the leading shippers have become interested in a movement to ask the legislature for a law similar to the reciprocal demurrage law of some of the other

"Reciprocal demurrage would seldom compensate the shipper for loss incurred by failure to obtain cars, because a firm may lose a great deal by one day's delay on one car. Many shippers believe, however, that a reasonable law to fix responsibility on the carrier would act as a decided check upon any carelessness of the read in allowing empty cars to bank up in one place when they are needed elsewhere to move business.

to bank up in one place when they are needed elsewhere to move business.

"The railroad is a common carrier, holding a charter of great value from the State, and favored by a multitude of special laws which have been enacted to make the business of railroads profitable. Railroad companies control the commercial highways of the country, and they should be required to perform the service which they monopolize.

"A railway can always obtain new capital for the asking from the investors of the country, and if it does not provide itself with sufficient equipment to take care of the business offered by shippers, it should suffer a penalty a great deal more severe than paying a little demurrage to the suffering shipper. No railroad company in likely to lose materially in its earnings from paying demurrage. It would not be in any sense a penalty, but would act merely as a check on inefficient management.

"It is especially important to the small shippers of the country. The large shipper has a leverage to use on the roads which is generally effective in protecting his interests, especially since the laws forbid paying rebates or making money concessions of any kind to the big shipper. The small firm has usually suffered first in a car shortage, and there is likely to be a great deal more of this in the future. If a shipper could prove that a railroad had willfully discriminated against him, there is no doubt that he could collect heavy damages, but the railroad can offer so many excuses that it is practically impossible for a judge or jury to unravel a case of this kind. A reciprocal demurrage compensation.

"The record of demurrage claims would show conclusively whether one shipper has been discriminated against in favor of other shippers in the allotment of cars. Figures that have been quoted in this bulletin show that there is no lack of equipment to handle all the business that may be offered to the railroads, and every measure that will promote greater efficiency is in the right direction."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 9th instant approved and signed the following acts:

On January 9:

S. 55. An act for the widening of Bladensburg road, and for other purposes;

S. 64. An act for the extension of Seventh street and Franklin street NE., and for other purposes;

S. 68. An act for the widening of a section of Columbia road east of Sixteenth street;

S. 133. An act authorizing the extension of Twenty-third street NW. to Kalorama road;
S. 2098. An act authorizing the extension of Second street

NW. from Elm street north to Bryant street, of W street from its present terminus west of Flagler place to Second street, and of W street west of Second street eastwardly to Second street;

S. 2260. An act authorizing the extension of Meridian place NW .

S. 5246. An act to provide for the extension of Geneseo place and Summit place, District of Columbia; and S. 5565. An act to close certain alleys in the District of Co-

IMPERIAL VALLEY OR SALTON SINK REGION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The governor of the State of California and individuals and communities in southern California have made urgent appeals to me to take as the "Imperial Valley" or "Salton Sink" region from threatened destruction by the overflow of Colorado River. The situation appears so serious and urgent that I now refer the matter to the Congress for its consideration, together with my recommendations upon the subject. Briefly stated the conditions are these: The Imperial Valley, so called, in San Diego County, Cal., includes a large tract of country below sea level. Southeast of the valley and considerably above its level is the which the river pursues a tortuous course, finally entering the Gulf of California. The lands in Imperial Valley are 200 feet or more below which the river pursues a tortuous course, finally entering the Gulf of California. The lands in Imperial Valley are 200 feet or more below the level of Colorado River. Down as far as the international border they are protected from inundation by low-lying bills. South of the boundary, in the Republic of Mexico, the hills cease abruptly and only the broad low mud banks of the river protect the valley from being converted into an initiad sea or land. In our the United States can neither aid nor protect the United States. The United States can neither aid nor protect the luterests of its citizens without going upon foreign soil.

Nature has through many centuries protected this great depression from overflow, but the restless river, constantly shifting, has annually needed to cause it to do so.

This condition has been long known, and through many years schemes have been discussed either to convert the Salton Sink area into a lake or to irrigate the desert lands below sea level by making a cut in Mexico chrough the west bank of the Colorado River. It was also well understood that if the cut in the ban of the numerous smaller speculators attracted to the subsidiary organizations, were of the most visionary character. Actual investments made have been small in proportion to estimates of wealth which appeared to be possible of realization.

The company entered upon its construction work with large plans but with inadequate capital. All of its structures for the control and distribution of water were temporary in character, being built of wood and of the smallest possible dimensions. Through the efforts thus made a large amount of land was brought under cultivation, and at one time it was reported that over 100,000 acres were being more or less irrigated.

thus made a large amount of land was brought under cultivation, and at one time it was reported that over 100,000 acres were being more or less irrigated.

The first heading of the canal of the California Development Company was in the United States immediately north of the Mexican border. It was found, however, after a time that the heading on the United States side of the line did not give a grade to furnish sufficient flow of water, and after headings had been opened at other points without successful results, a cut in the river bank was made 4 miles farther south, in Mexican territory. This gave the water a shorter and steeper course toward the valley. The making of this cut in a bank composed of light alluvial soil above a depression such as this, without controlling devices, was criminal negligence. This short cut on Mexican soil was made in the fall of 1904. It was gradually eroded by the passage of the water, and in the spring of 1905 the floods of the Colorado River, entering the artificial cut, rapidly widened and deepened it until the entire flow of the river was turned westerly down the relatively steep slope in the Imperial Valley and thence into what is known as "Salton Sink" or "Salton Sea."

After the mischief became apparent strenuous efforts were made by the California Development Company to close the break, but these were without success. Finally the Southern Pacific Company, finding its tracks imperiled and traffic seriously interfered with, advanced money to the California Development Company, received as security a majority of the shares of the company, and thus took charge of the situation.

By means of the facilities available to the Southern Pacific Coma majority of the shares of the company, and thus took charge of the situation.

By means of the facilities available to the Southern Pacific Company the break in the west bank of the Colorado River was closed on November 4, 1906. A month later, however, a sudden rise in the river undermined the poorly constructed levees immediately south of the former break, and the water again resumed its course into the Salton Sea.

The results have been highly alarming, as it appears that if the water is the former break, and the water again resumed its course into the Salton Sea.

The results have been highly alarming, as it appears that if the water is not checked it will cut a very deep channel which, progressing upstream in a series of cataracts, will result in conditions such that the water can not be diverted by gravity into the canals already built in the Imperial Valley. If the break is not closed before the coming spring flood of 1907, it appears highly probable that all of the property values created in this valley will be wiped out, including farms and towns, as well as the revenues derived by the Southern Pacific Company. Ultimately the channel will be deepened in the main stream itself up to and beyond the town of Yuma, destroying the homes and farms there, the great railroad bridge, and the Government works at Laguna dam above Yuma.

It is difficult to estimate how many people have settled in the valley, the figures varying from 6,000 persons up to as high as 10,000. It is also difficult to ascertain how much money has been actually spent in real improvements. Town lots have been laid off, sold at auction, and several hundred buildings erected in the various small settlements scattered throughout the tract. The greater part of the public land has been taken up under the homestead or desert entry laws, and sufficient work has been done to secure title. Some crops have been raised and under favorable conditions the output in the near future will be large.

The actual amount of tangible wealth or securities possessed by the

has been taken up under the homestead or desert entry laws, and sufficient work has been done to secure title. Some crops have been raised and under favorable conditions the output in the near future will be large.

The actual amount of tangible wealth or securities possessed by the settlers to-day upon which money can be raised is believed to be very small. Nearly all individual property has been expended in securing water rights from the California Development Company, or from the other organizations handling the water supply and controlled by this company. It is evident that the people have slender resources to fall back upon and, in view of the threatened calamity, are practically helpless. The California Development Company is also unable to meet the exigency. The obligations assumed by the sale of water rights are so great that the property of the company is not adequate to meet these obligations. In other words, a gift of the visible property of this company, and of its rights would not be a sufficient offset to the assumption of its liabilities. Nevertheless, the people in their desperation were reported as trying to issue and sell bonds secured by their property in order to give to the California Development Company a million dollars to assist in repairing the break.

The complications which have arisen from the transfer of the property and the involved relations of the California Development Company with its numerous subsidiary companies are such that the United States would not be justified in having any dealings with this company until the complications are removed and the Government has a full understanding of every phase of the situation.

It has been stated above that the California Development Company has not the financial strength to repair the break and to restore the bank of the Colorado River to such permanent condition that a similar occurrence can not happen. It is further understood that the Southern Pacific Company, having expended $2,000,000 or more for the protection of its interests, financial loss to the United States will be great. The entire irrigable area which will be either submerged or deprived of water in the Imperial Valley and along the Colorado River is capable of adding to the permanent population of Arizona and California at least $50,000 people and probably $500,000. Much of the land will be worth from $500 to $1,500 per acre to individual owners, or a total of from $350,000,000. The point to be especially emphasized is that prompt action must be taken, if any; otherwise the conditions may become so extreme as to be impracticable of remedy. The history of past attempts to close the break in the river bank has shown that each time, through delay, the work has cost double or treble what it would have cost had prompt action been taken. It is probable now that with an expenditure of $2,000,000 the river can be restored to its former channel and held there indefinitely, but if this action is not taken immediately, several times this sum may be required to restore it, and possibly it can not be restored unless enormous sums are expended.

At the present moment there appears to be only one agency equal to the task of controlling the river—namely, the Sodthern Pacific Company, with its transportation facilities, its equipment, and control of the California Development Company and subsidiary companies. The need of railroad facilities and equipment and the international complications are such that the officers of the United States, even with unlimited funds, could not carry on the work with the celerity required. It is only the fact that the officers of the Southern Pacific Company, acting also as officers of the California Development Company, have been able to apply all its resources for transportation, motive power, and the operation of the road that has made it possible to control the situation to the extent which they have already done. The Southern Pacific Company is now reported to be working strenuously to fill the break through which the Colorado River is flowing westward to th for work done since the break of November 4, 1906, is one for future consideration; for work done prior to that date no claim can be admitted.

But one practicable course is now open for consideration.

The Southern Pacific Company must continue its work to close the break and restore the river to its proper channel. The United States can then take charge, making the protective works permanent and providing for their maintenance.

It is not believed that a free gift of this money should be made, as by its investment the stability of property of great value will be secured and the increase in land values throughout the Imperial Valley will be sufficient to justify the provision that this money should be returned to the Government.

The Reclamation Service should be authorized to take steps at once for the construction of an irrigation project, under the terms of the reclamation act, for the lands in the Imperial Valley and in the lower Colorado River Valley. The Service should be in position to proceed actively with the organization of the project and the construction of the works as soon as the conditions in regard to the protection of the valley against overflow will justify expenditures for this purpose.

To accomplish this, the United States should acquire the rights of the California Development Company and its subsidiary corporations in the United States and Mexico upon such reasonable terms as shall protect the interests of the Government and of the water users. The United States should obtain, by convention with Mexico, the right to carry water through that country upon reasonable conditions.

Most of the land in the Imperial Valley has been entered under the terms of the desert-land act or the homestead laws, and title has not passed out of the United States.

The construction work required would be: The main canal some 6 miles in length from Laguna Dam into the Imperial Valley; the repair and partial reconstruction of the present distribution system in the valley and its extension to other lands, mainl fore be impossible to construct a reclamation project for the Imperial Valley with the funds now in hand, and it will be necessary for Congress to make specific appropriation for this work if it decides to undertake it.

Such appropriation would be expended for a project carried out under all the provisions of the reclamation act, requiring the return to the reclamation fund of the cost of construction and maintenance of the irrigation works, and there should be the further requirement that the cost of permanent protective works and their maintenance be repaid.

The interests of the Government in this matter are so great in the protection of its own property, particularly of the public lands, that Congress is justified in taking prompt and effective measures toward the relief of the present situation. No steps, however, should be taken except with a broad comprehension of the magnitude of the work and with the belief that within the next ten years the works and development will be carried out to their full proportions.

The plan in general is to enter upon a broad, comprehensive scheme of development for all the irrigable land upon Colorado River, with needed storage at the headwaters, so that none of the water of this great river which can be put to beneficial use will be allowed to go to waste. The Imperial Valley will never have a safe and adequate supply of water until the main canal extends from the Laguna dam. At each end this dam is connected with rock bluffs and provides a permanent heading founded on rock for the diversion of the water. Any works built below this point would not be safe from destruction by floods, and can not be depended upon for a permanent and reliable supply of water to the valley.

If Congress does not give authority and make adequate provision to take up this work in the way suggested it must be inferred that it acquiesces in the abandonment of the work at Laguna and of all future attempts to utilize the valuable public domain in this part of the country.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, as the carrying into effect of the recommendations made in the message of the President is likely to affect our relations with the Republic of Mexico, it seems to me proper to ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that, with the accompanying maps, it be printed. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I ask that Senate resolution No. 208 may now be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the resolution submitted by Mr. Foraker on December 20, 1906, as modified; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and hereby is, authorized to take such further testimony as may be necessary to establish the facts connected with the discharge of members of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, and that it be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report thereon, by bill or otherwise.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, this resolution has already occupied the attention of the Senate during several legislative days, and it undoubtedly has excited a great deal of interest throughout the country. The discussion in this body has been throughout the country. The discussion in this body has been so far engaged in by distinguished lawyers. In some of its aspects it has the appearance of a case in court in which certain members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment, or rather certain enlisted men belonging to that regiment, are under indictment. The President of the United States is the prosecutor as well as the executioner. Following the simile of a trial in court, the array of counsel for the defense and for the prosecution is not yet complete; but so far as their names have appeared on the record there is an element of incongruity and of the ridiculous almost in the queerness of the alignment. For instance, as attorneys aiding the prosecution, or pressing it, we had the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson], a Democrat; the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], a Republican, coupled with the distinguished Senator from Virginia LM. ginia [Mr. Daniel], a Democrat, and for the defense—if it shall be so considered when I get through—I shall be put in the record as aiding the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER ].

Of course, being nothing more than a cornfield lawyer, my contribution to the legal discussion of this question will be very limited and comparatively worthless. My colleague and brother attorney must realize that, so far as legal assistance is to go, he will get little or no aid from me; and I must confess that thus far I do not think he needs any.

But the ridiculousness of the situation is made apparent when one considers that a Senator from the North, who, by reason of his radical and aggressive utterances and, probably, actions in the past once gave him the name of "Fire Alarm"—I say that Senator finds himself aligned with that Senator from the South who is supposed to have a broiled negro for breakfast [laughter], who is known to justify lynching for rape, and whose attitude is one of not hatred toward the negroes, but of a feeling akin to it, in the belief that white men are made of better clay than negroes and that white men alone are entitled to participate in government—I say this alliance is an odd one.

I want to say, Mr. President, that I appear here in this connection, and I shall present the views which I shall give to the Senate upon the broad and general proposition, although coming from South Carolina and known as probably the most ultra of my brethren in this Chamber on the subject of the race question—that even I, while I may be alone, and, as I am informed, am already alone in my attitude—even I want to see the negroes treated fairly and justly.

The President of the United States has, in my opinion, dealt with certain men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry very unjustly. He has gone entirely too far in dealing with some of them, while he has stopped very, very far short of meting out proper punishment and justice to others of them. My proposition in discussing this question will be to try to prove that even he has no right nor any authority to punish an innocent man because some men have been guilty.

What are the charges against these 167 men whose skins are What are the charges against these for her whose sams are black who have been summarily discharged from the United States Army by Executive order? They are very grave. I shall now read from the President's special message, found in Senate Document 155. Speaking of the troops, he says:

They have stolidly and as one man broken their oaths of enlistment and refused to help discover the criminals.

I propose to read the oath of enlistment, so that Senators may understand just how much there is of truth in the President's accusation:

I, A B, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America; that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever, and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to the rules and Articles of War.

I see nothing in this oath which makes it obligatory upon a man belonging to these three companies of the Twenty-fifth Infantry to tell something that he does not know or to tell something that might incriminate himself. The Constitution, I believe, protects a man from being compelled to answer questions like that.

I have read all the testimony, or, I should say, the exhibits, for there is very little real testimony submitted in this Document No. 155, and I have not been able to discover wherein a single man has broken his oath of enlistment.

Further down in his message the President says:

People have spoken as if this discharge from the service was a punishment. I deny emphatically that such is the case, because as punishment it is utterly inadequate. The punishment meet for mutineers and murderers such as those guilty of the Brownsyllle assault is death; and a punishment only less severe ought to be meted out to those who have aided and abetted mutiny and murder and treason by refusing to help in their detection.

So we have the charge of the breaking of the oath of enlistment, supplemented by charges of mutiny, treason, and conspiracy of silence. I have here somewhere—and I will put the exact definition in the RECORD-what the law and the dictionaries define as treason and mutiny. Senators are all familiar with the words; they know what they mean; and I deny emphatically that a solitary man of the Twenty-fifth Infantry has been guilty of either mutiny or treason. Murder has undoubtedly been committed, and conspiracy to murder has been committed, and, as I believe, by some of these very men; but in no case and in no report of any inspector are more than twenty charged with participation in that crime. Nowhere do we find more than twenty involved; yet 167 men have been discharged. Here are the definitions I spoke of:

DEFINITIONS.

Mutiny.—1. Insurrection against constituted authority, particularly military or naval authority; concerted revolt against the rules of discipline or the lawful commands of a superior officer; hence, generally forcible resistance to rightful authority; insubordination.

2. Violent commotion; tumult; strife.

Treason.—1. The offense of trying to overthrow the government of the state to which the offender owes allegiance, or of betraying the state into the hands of a foreign power; disloyalty; treachery.

2. Loosely, the betrayal of any trust or confidence; treashery; perfidy.

The President says that their discharge without honor is not a punishment. Then, why did he do it? Why did he not seek to obtain the necessary evidence to convict the guilty and leave the innocent alone? Who is responsible for the failure of justice?

In the first place, these troops were sent to Texas against the protest of one of the Senators from Texas and of the Member of Congress representing that district, who warned the War Department of the dangers and the almost inevitable result of their going there. Their warnings were brushed aside as of no concern or moment to the authorities, and the troops were sent. They were sent there, too, in the face of their known record, as officially set forth in this document, as a lawless, brutal, murderous set of cutthroats. Trouble broke out almost immediately, as could have been known from the character of the men and the character of the town. A soldier jostles some ladies or pushes them off the sidewalk. He is clubbed by a Federal officer-I have not traced it to see whether or not he is a northern man, but he holds an important position in the custom-house. Another soldier is either pushed or jostled off the sidewalk leading from the boat and gets in the mud. The negroes attempt to exercise their privileges, as they think they were entitled to, of drinking with white men at the same This is denied, and they grow very angry. A day or two later as respectable a woman as lives in the city of Brownsville is seized by the hair by a soldier in broad daylight, violently thrown to the ground; the man runs off and makes his escape, having given this exhibition of unsoldierly conduct.

When the commanding officer is informed of it he pooh-poohs the accusation. It is hardly worth his consideration, because forsooth there is a "tenderloin district" near by. He did not even take the trouble to inquire whether this was a respectable woman or not. He makes no move to detect the brute who had been guilty of it. He acts altogether as though there was nothing dangerous around there, nothing worthy of his consideration, nothing that would cause him to think it worth while to tighten the discipline, to take precautions, to try to bring about an understanding with the authorities of the city, and so on, and stop these clashes.

So within two weeks—I believe they got there on the 28th of July—on the 13th of August, about midnight, somebody runs amuck; a white man is killed in one of the barrooms where the negroes had been denied the privilege of drinking. of police has his horse killed under him, his arm shattered so it has to be amputated; houses are perforated with bulletshouses in which women and children are lying in bed and where the lights are still burning. The men being in the dark, of course it is difficult to prove positively that these were colored soldiers, but I do not imagine that any evidence will ever be produced or can be produced to show that this crime was not committed by some of the Twenty-fifth Infantry stationed at I am thoroughly satisfied of it myself. I am Fort Brown. · convinced by the negative rather than the positive testimony, and from my knowledge of negro character after fifty-nine years' contact with them. I claim to know as much about the characteristics of the American negro as any man living, and I have no more doubt the negro soldiers did these infamous things than that I am alive and standing here.

The Senate committee, if it shall be authorized, may go to Brownsville and investigate to the limit, and I hope, since there is the desire for the fullest possible light, with which I agree, that it will be able to get evidence which will shield the innocent negroes and at the same time enable the guilty ones to be punished.

I ask to incorporate in the Record a brief résumé or synopsis of the different acts of violence, murder, riot, shooting up towns, etc., of the Twenty-fifth Infantry which has been compiled and sent to us, supplemented by one case coming from Key West, Fla., which appeared in yesterday's Record in the speech of Mr. Slayden, of Texas, in the shape of an affidavit of Mr. Knight, sheriff of Monroe County, Fla., as to one of their escapades or criminal acts as they were going to Cuba. In the affidavit the sheriff testifies to the fact that a member of that regiment was arrested by the police and imprisoned in jail, and about midnight forty or fifty members of the company visited the jail and threatened to kill the sheriff, and do dire and sununlawful acts unless this man was released, and, in fear of his life, the sheriff turned him loose. I will ask that these various matters may be incorporated in the Record without reading. I will just give the headlines: Sturgis City, Dak.; Winnemucca, Nev.; San Carlos Agency, Ariz.; El Paso, Tex.;

Niobrara, Nebr.; Key West, Fla.

In all these instances this very same regiment had perpetrated outrages almost as great as the one at Fort Brown. It was known that this was the character of the regiment, and yet the War Department, ignoring the protest and the warning of the representatives from Texas in this body and in the other, sends them there anyhow, and it is to locate the indirect responsibility, if I can not locate the direct responsibility for this crime and for this tragedy, that I shall present some reasons after a while.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted as requested.

The papers referred to are as follows:

ROWS THE TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY HAS BEEN IN.

Rows the twenty-fifth infantry has been in.

Sturgls City, Dak., September 19-20, 1885.—Twenty-fifth Infantry was stationed at Fort Meade, 1½ miles away, and on account of some imaginary grievance came into the town and killed Dr. H. P. Lynch. About fifteen or twenty soldiers were in the party and were armed with Government rifles. A mob then lynched Corporal Hollis. In retaliation a body of negro troops went to town and shot up a dance house, killing a cowboy. Four men were arrested and turned over for trial. Troops were not removed.

Winnemucca, Nev., June 29, 1899.—Twenty-fifth Infantry stopped at Winnemucca to get supper, and negro troops went into a saloon and a free-for-all fight ensued, in which the bartender was killed. About thirty soldiers went into the saloon and ran the barkeeper out and robbed the saloon. Same troops went on to Carlin and robbed another saloon, and the train pulled out before the proprietor could make complaint to the officers. After the shooting at Winnemucca, and even while it was going on, the negro soldiers all made a break for the cars of the train and became so thoroughly mixed that nobody could identify the men who had been in the saloon. The authorities held the train from 6 o'clock until 1.30 at night and then had to let them proceed without finding the guilty parties.

'San Carlos Agency, Ariz., October 18, 1899.—Indians complained that soldiers came into their camp and mistreated their women, and upon the authority of the officers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry arrested upon the negro soldiers at their camp. In retaliation thirteen negroes went to the Indian camp and severely beat four of the Indian. Two soldiers turned State's evidence, and all were arrested and given to the civil authorities for trial.

El Paso, Tea., February 16-71, 1900.—Nine men of Company A made an attack on the city jail, where two of their companions were confined on charge of drunk and disorderly, and they killed a policeman on duty at the jail and had one of their number killed. One of the soldie from Fort Niobrara was shot up and a woman was killed and two men wounded. Two soldiers with khaki uniforms and guns were seen running toward the fort and sixteen empty Krag-Jorgenson shells were found. Although every effort was made to find the guilty parties they were never found.

KEY WEST INCIDENT.

However, the Twenty-fifth Infantry has been conspicuous even among the negro troops, for its persistent career of crime and mutiny. In 1898, while on the way to Cuba, the regiment was delayed a few days in Key West. What they did there to maintain their record of insurrection and contempt for law is told in the following language by the sheriff of Monroe County. Please observe that the statement is sworn to. I have a letter from an attorney of Key West, who was then police judge, which confirms the statement of the sheriff and which also says that a drunken soldier, whom he was arresting, fired his pistol at the officer.

STATE OF FLORIDA, Monroe County:

State of Florida, Monroe County:

Before the undersigned authority personally appeared Frank W. Knight, who, being duly sworn, says: That I was sheriff of Monroe County, Fla., in May, 1898, and that the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry (colored) was at that time in the city of Key West awaiting orders for Cuba. That on the 20th day of April, anno Domini 1898, at about 10 p. m. of the same day, one Henry A. Williams (colored) and one of the men belonging to the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry was brought to jail by the city police, charged with an assault with intent to kill; that at about 1 a. m. next morning at least thirty or forty of the soldiers belonging to said Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, armed with their guns, came to the jail and surrounded the jail, and came to the door of said jail and demanded the said Williams, saying that if he was not delivered to them they would break the jail down. I, being overpowered and no arms to defend myself and the rest of the prisoners in jail and fearing trouble might come to all in jail, thought it best to deliver said prisoner to them, intending to report the matter to the commanding officer at the barracks the aext morning. Deponent further says that another reason why he delivered the prisoner over to them was because he had other prisoners in jail charged with murder, and he feared that if he did not turn over this man they would carry their threats into execution, and he would then lose those who he had confined for murder. That the conduct of these men was boisterous, and they were crying out all the time that if I did not turn this man over they would riddle me with bullets and that there would not be a brick left in the building.

F. W. Knight,

F. W. KNIGHT, Sheriff Monroe County, Fla.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this the 27th day of December, A. D. 1906.

L. W. BETHEL, Notary Public, State of Florida at Large.

Mr. TILLMAN. In speaking about the type of men who composed this regiment, I will quote this from the record in regard to the Sturgis incident:

to the Sturgis incident:

A few minutes afterwards another lieutenant came to the house and said he had heard firing from the direction of Sturgis, but thought it was at the "Half-Way House." The general then ordered him to take another detachment and arrest the soldiers. In about a half hour afterwards a horseman came riding up in great haste and informed the general that the soldiers had fired into "Abe Hill's" house and killed an inoffensive cowboy who was standing there, and that they had also fired volleys into one or two other houses. General Sturgis then ordered that Captain Ord should make a check roll call, examine the arms, and bring in such as had the appearance of being recently fired. This was done. But the fellows had scampered back by short cuts over the hills and gotten into their bunks before the roll call, which disclosed the absence of only three, who, I think, were satisfactorily accounted for. (Page 320.)

As to Winnemucce, it says:

As to Winnemucca, it says:

Daylight had now so faded that only flashes of the discharges (five to eight in number) were seen. It is admitted by Klucny that no shooting occurred until the men left the saloon. After the shooting the enlisted men dispersed quickly, running for their coaches. In the meantime some one had gone to the Lafayette Hotel and apprised the officers there at supper of the shooting, but before they could reach the scene of the disturbance the men were in their coaches.

So these fellows were trained how to shoot up a town and murder men and then mingle with the innocent and get back to quarters or wherever they might at that time belong, and therefore hide the trail of the actual criminal and prevent detection.

Mr. President, before I go any further I wish to define, broadly and briefly, the principles on which I rely for demonstration that the President of the United States has exceeded his authority and has done an unconstitutional act. I have challenged and I now challenge any man to produce in any article of war a scintilla of language to show that these men have been guilty of the acts which the President charges; I mean the conspiracy of silence. I said any of these men; I mean that all of them have done it. The conspiracy of silence is not in the Articles of War. The mutiny is there, but no man can produce a solitary fact in relation to this transaction which even squints at mutiny, and the charge of treason is too absurd even to be considered.

But the foundation upon which I rest my case is the wellsettled principle of English jurisprudence, from which we derive our own, that the innocent shall not be punished for the sins of the guilty, and Blackstone tells us "it is better that ten guilty men shall escape than that one innocent man should suffer," and all men are to be considered innocent until proven guilty.

Speaking of this conspiracy of silence, I call attention to the President's annual message, sent to us in December, where, on page 9, he quotes with approval, and therefore indorses and adopts, this language from Governor Jelks, of Alabama:

The white people of the South indict the whole colored race on the ground that even the better elements lend no assistance whatever in ferreting out criminals of their own color. The respectable colored people must learn not to harbor their criminals, but to assist the officers in bringing them to justice.

Does the President of the United States believe that when he says the colored people "must learn so and so" that is going to says the colored people "must learn so and so" that is going to change the nature of the African, or that his ipse dixit, his command, will make "the Ethiopian change his skin or the Ieopard his spots?" Every man familiar with the negro character knows that they will bear torture with stoicism in defense of one another rather than act as traitors. Whether it be a virtue or a vice, it is inherent in the nature and can not be eradicated by discipline or anything else. Then why upbraid the poor negro and punish him because he is true to his nature and his race and his color?

I quote some more from the message of our Executive:

Moreover, where any crime committed by a member of one race against a member of another race is avenged in such fashion that it seems as if not the individual criminal, but the whole race, is attacked, the result is to exasperate to the highest degree race feeling. There is but one safe rule in dealing with black men as with white men; it is the same rule that must be applied in dealing with rich men and poor men; that is, to treat each man, whatever his color, his creed, or his social position, with even-handed justice on his real worth as a man.

Mr. President, why did the negroes in Brownsville attack the whole town without singling out a solitary white man, except because of race hatred? Who can escape from the fact that if that had been a negro town the probabilities are there never would have been any Brownsville murder? It was due to the hatred of the white race collectively that the soldiers invaded the city in that way and shot it up, doing murder, and then rushing back, as they had been trained, to get into quarters, to get somewhere around when the roll call was going on and escape detection, for the time being at least, if not forever, and thus have gratified their revenge upon the white race generally. And who is more responsible than any other man alive for this feeling among the negro soldiers?

I have here somewhere—I will find it in a minute—something relating directly to this phase of the subject and pointing to the inspiration and source of this feeling. I have it now. I will read, first, as indicating where this virus emanates, what its source is, General Orders, No. 29:

[General Orders, No. 29.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 8, 1906.

The following is published to the Army for the information and guidance of all concerned:

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, February 3, 1906.

My Dear Mr. Secretary:

The White House, Washington, February 3, 1996.

My Dear Mr. Secretary:

I have received your letter and the court-martial proceedings in the case of Lieut. Roy I. Taylor.

In my judgment Lieutenant Taylor committed one of the most serious faults which any officer can commit. I am glad that he was reduced twelve files. It is a pleasure to record the fact that his offense was altogether exceptional in the body to which he belongs; I know of no other officer who has ever been guilty of similar misconduct.

There is no body of men in this country of similar size which merits so well of the country as the body of officers and enlisted men in the Army and Navy of the United States. Not only should the country as a whole jealously guard the interests of these men and regard their honor as being identified to a peculiar degree and in a peculiar sense with its own, but the members of the body should themselves feel the same jealous eagerness to uphold the honor and standing of all connected with it. Above all this should be the object of the officers as regards the enlisted men.

The more civilized a nation is, the more honestly desirous it is of securing peace, the greater should be the care with which it fosters and encourages the preservation of the military virtues among its citizens, and in no way can this be better achieved than by a resolute effort to secure proper recognition for the enlisted men of the Army and Navy. The uniform of the enlisted man is a badge of honor. It entitles him to peculiar consideration. It shows that in the great majority of cases he has learned those habits of self-command, of self-restraint, of obedience, and of fearlessness in the face of danger, which put him above most of his fellows who have not possessed similar privileges. To strive to discriminate against him in any way is literally an infamy; for it is in reality one of the most serious offenses which can be committed against the stability and greatness of our nation. If a hotel keeper or the owner of a theater or any other pu

But that is not all. Here is another exhibit:

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., September 21, 1906.

Dear Admiral Thomas: I inclose $100 to be used in that suit, which, thanks to you, has been so wisely undertaken, to test the legality of excluding any man from any public place of entertainment because he wears the United States uniform. I feel that it is the duty of every good citizen to endeavor in every shape and way to make it plain that he regards the uniform of the United States Army and Navy just as much when worn by an enlisted man as when worn by an officer, as a badge of honor, and therefore entitling the wear'er to honor so long as he behaves decently.

There is no finer body of men in all our country than the enlisted men of the Army and Navy of the United States, and I can not sufficiently express my indignation and contempt for any man who treats his uniform save with the respect to which it is entitled. If a man misbehaves himself, then no matter what uniform he wears he should be dealt with accordingly; but the fact of wearing a United States uniform should be accepted as presumptive evidence that the man who wears it is all right, and any discrimination against the uniform as such is more than presumptive evidence that the man thus discriminating is all wrong.

Sincerely, yours,

Theodore Roosevelt.

The President expatiates in a personal way along the same

The President expatiates in a personal way along the same line, of the right of an enlisted man regardless of color or race, to enjoy every privilege of entering hotels, theaters, cars, and everything else the same as whites, ignoring the fact that we have in Washington separate bars—

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?
Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.
Mr. NELSON. Would you deny that privilege to a white soldier which the President has asserted ought to be accorded to him?

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course not. I will go as far as any man in giving the white man in the Army and the white man out of the Army equal privileges.

Mr. NELSON. Why should not the colored soldier, if he conducts himself properly, have the same privileges that the white soldier has?

Mr. TILLMAN. For the simple reason that God Almighty made him colored and did not make him white. [Laughter.] Now, I am not going to give you any logical answer to a good many things that will pass through your mind. I am going to tell you, however, or, rather, I shall tell the Senate and not address the Senator particularly, because I suppose the same thought is passing through the minds of others, that it is not worth our while to try to make men over. We can not do it by law or by constitutional amendment. I will discuss that phase a little later.

I was proceeding to illustrate by saying that in this District we have thought it necessary to have separate schools for the races, and we have found it necessary to prevent the negroes from voting, and in order to do that we have prevented the white people from voting. It is well understood that no negro would any more dare to go to the Willard Hotel or the Raleigh and expect to be served at the bar or in the restaurant than if he were to go to the White House-no; not as easily. [Laughter.] But why ignore a great fact, which is that caste feeling is universal; that it pulsates in the bosom of the Senator from Minnesota, though he may not be aware of it, and that you can not ignore caste feeling. But I do not want to get off on that line yet

In illustration of this programme or this cultivation of the idea of absolute equality, the President has been represented, not by himself directly, but by his Secretary of the Navy, in an effort to secure the passage of a bill, which was introduced last winter, coming from the Navy Department, accompanied by a letter of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Bonaparte, urging its passage, looking to the punishment of any person, public carrier or other, who seeks to discriminate on account of the uniform, not on account of race or color, but on account of the uniform. I will ask that these exhibits be printed without reading them. They are all along the same line and they bear the impress of the President's own feeling, his own ideas, his own purposes, for none of his Cabinet ever differs in essentials with their chief.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is

The papers referred to are as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 15, 1906.

Siz: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for your consideration and that of the committee, the draft of a bill "To promote the effi-clency of the Navy, and, to such end, to secure due respect to the uniform thereof."

This proposed measure makes a refusal on the part of any common carrier, innkeeper, or proprietor of a place of public entertainment or amusement to accommodate, serve, or entertain any enlisted man of the Navy wearing the uniform thereof punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, provided that such enlisted man is sober and orderly and able and willing to pay for such accommodation, provision, or service.

ment, or both, provided that such enlisted man is sober and orderly and able and willing to pay for such accommodation, provision, or service.

It is believed that some action should be taken by Congress to enforce respect for the uniform of enlisted men of the Navy. In this connection the attention of the committee is invited to the following paragraphs taken from my annual report for 1905, page 11:

"The attention of the Department was called some months since to the action of one of its employees at a navy-yard in refusing to carry out a contract he had made with an enlisted man of the Navy to let a portion of his house to the latter, on the ground that the intended lodger expected to wear his uniform. In reply to a letter of inquiry the employee in question admitted this statement to be substantially correct, but gave as an excuse that his wife feared her "social position" would be affected if a man in sailor's clothes were seen going into or coming out of her house. On the admissions contained in this answer I dismissed him from the public service.

"The uniform of an American sailor is universally recognized as not only decorous but picturesque, and is frequently imitated in the costumes of children and young women. The objection on the part of the dismissed employee or his wife to its use by a person who should live in their house evidently arose not from any prejudice against the dress, but from the unfounded and calumnious notion, unfortunately not confined to them, that a sailor on shore is presumptively a disorderly and drunken individual and a fit associate for rowdles and prostitutes. I need not discuss whether there ever was any truth in this idea with respect to the sailors of our Navy; certainly it is wholly false and slanderous at present.

"The Department has tried long and earnestly to secure for the

I need not discuss whether there ever was any truth in this idea with respect to the sailors of our Navy; certainly it is wholly false and slanderous at present.

"The Department has tried long and earnestly to secure for the service men of good moral character and reputable antecedents; and it therefore demands and, so far as it can, compels respect for these men and for their uniform from all classes of the community. It might appear at first sight that an incident such as the one above noted was hardly of sufficient importance to justify mention in this report or action by the Department, but in certain respects this discrimination against the uniform has very serious consequences. Not only does it retard enlistments and promote desertions, but when a ship of war comes into port from a cruise, lasting perhaps many months, its enlisted complement, consisting in great majority of young married men, have a natural and legitimate desire for relaxation and amusement after this long period of isolation and monotony. If they are not admitted to reputable places of entertainment, they will go to such as are disreputable; if the "social position" of virtuous women is affected by being seen in their company, they will associate with vicious women, and the results of this almost enforced debauchery will be deplorable to themselves and to the service.

"I recommend that the Congress make any refusal on the part of the proprietor of a theater or other place of amusement, an innkeeper, or a common carrier, to furnish accommodation to an orderly and well-behaved person in the naval service able and willing to pay for such accommodation an offense against the United States, punishable by fine and imprisonment."

Very respectfully,

Charles J. Bonaparte, and imprisonment." Very respectfully,

CHARLES J. BONAPARTE Secretary.

Hon. Eugene Hale, Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Scnate.

A bill (S. 3406) to promote the efficiency of the Navy and, to such end, to secure due respect to the uniform thereof.

A bill (S. 3406) to promote the efficiency of the Navy and, to such end, to secure due respect to the uniform thereof.

Be it enacted, etc., That any common carrier, innkeeper, or proprietor of a place of public entertainment or amusement of any kind or description, or any agent, servant, or representative of any such common carrier, innkeeper, or proprietor as aforesaid, who shall willfully neglect or refuse to furnish any enlisted man of the Navy of the United States, wearing the uniform thereof as provided in his case by law or regulation duly made, any form of accommodation, provision, or service which the said common carrier, innkeeper, or proprietor as aforesaid is, at the time of application therefor by such enlisted man, so in uniform as aforesaid, prepared to furnish for compensation as such common carrier, innkeeper, or proprietor to an adult male person in good health, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, shall be fined not less than thirty days nor more than eighteen months, or shall suffer both such fine and such imprisonment, in the discretion of the said court: Provided, That the enlisted man aforesaid at the time of so applying for such accommodation, provision, or service as aforesaid shall be sober and orderly and able and willing to pay for the same in accordance with the rates fixed therefor by the said common carrier, innkeeper, or proprietor of a place of public entertainment or amusement when the like accommodation, provision, or service is applied for by civilians.

Sec. 2. That this act shall take effect from the date of its approval, and that all acts or parts of acts inconsistent therewith or repugnant thereto shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed to the extent of such inconsistency or repugnancy.

Mr. TILLMAN. It will be noted that in the above bill, which

Mr. TILLMAN. It will be noted that in the above bill, which was never reported back from the Naval Committee, that any enlisted man, black or yellow, would be entitled to its protection and benefits.

But these troops, having been taught that their uniform was a badge of nobility, entitling them to every consideration that every other man should get, are sent to this southern city, where class prejudice, if you want to designate it as such, exists. I will say, by the way, that I am informed that the city of Brownsville is not a Texas city, except that it is in Texas. It is inhabited very largely by people of northern birth, a great many of whom are Republicans, and the feeling of revulsion to social equality with the negro there, the blow on the head by Mr. Tate because a soldier jostled his wife, is no more than I would expect from any member of this Chamber, whatever his political affiliations, wherever he might be, who saw a white lady insulted by a negro soldier.

But do not let us forget that this feeling is not peculiarly southern. It is well-nigh universal. When these men went there and soon discovered that the people of the town did not recognize the President's idea and were not ready to subscribe to it, that they were unwilling to grant them the privileges that they thought they had the right to expect, they immediately set about to bring on an excuse or to provoke conditions which would make them feel justified in doing what they did

So it appears to me that primarily the responsibility for the Brownsville murder rests with the War Department in having sent these men there after their records; secondarily, that the President, having inculcated in the minds of these men and encouraged them in the feeling and belief that he, the great Executive of this nation, stood sponsor for the doctrine of absolute equality anywhere, instead of being dismissed without honor they would rather make His Excellency feel happy and proud to see how well they had learned the lesson and how they were taking it out on the bitter, vindictive, nigger-hating Texans, or southerners

I want to be just to the negro if I know how. Probably I do now know how. But I would be sufficiently just not to lynch 167 of them because twenty-odd had been guilty of something. No southern mob has ever gone that far in the way of taking life without due process of law. Doubtless innocent men have been lynched and innocent men will be lynched again, as they were at Atlanta, and the more this kind of doctrine of equality is preached the more lynchings and the more murders and the more trouble.

There is another phase of their being sent there, and that is that they had five officers for three companies. They were practically without control, and that, too, in view of the wellknown fact that discipline and preservation of order under such trying circumstances and conditions as arose there and as were likely to arise there would be impossible with so few officers. For instance, during the El Paso trouble, into which this same regiment got, Colonel McKibben, of the Twelfth Infantry, who was sent to investigate, writing March 1, 1900, from San Antonio, says:

The incident, however, shows that at all posts in this department garrisoned by single companies of colored soldiers similar disturbances are liable to occur without warning, due to fancied wrongs and the effort to take matters into their own hands. In the present instance there can be no possible excuse offered, and it can not even be suggested that the arrest of Corporal Dyson was not warranted.

The incident also emphasizes the need for a full complement of officers at all one-company posts. One officer can not alone properly and efficiently administer the affairs at these posts and at the same time pay the attention to the instruction and discipline of their companies, consisting so largely of recruits, with noncommissioned officers of comparatively short service and insufficient experience, which is absolutely necessary.

So, with the improper complement of officers, three companies of cutthroats, who had shown time and again the murderous character of the men, are sent to a town, imbued with the doctrine of the President that they must demand recognition of their social rights, to drink with white men, to go where they pleased, and be treated the same as white men.

Who, then, is responsible for the Brownsville outrage?

Let Senators themselves answer the question!

Now I come down to some of the particulars. When this tragedy first occurred a strange thing happened. It was not so strange, either, considering the first impression made on the Executive mind, as shown by the dispatch from Mr. Loeb to the War Department, page 39. He says that the people of Brownsville must be made to understand that if these troops were removed from there in response to the pleas of the citizens, to the pleas and protests of both Senators, reiterated two or three times, that post would be abandoned, temporarily at least. "If you do not take your medicine and allow my negro pets, whom I send among you indoctrinated with the belief that they are as good as you are, to do as they please, you shall not have any Army post in the city of Brownsville at all." That is the first idea.

The next thing that occurs to me in reading this exhibit is to point out that while it was known, and the dispatches clearly show, to the War Department and the President, who kept in touch with it, that Major Penrose was incompetent, that he lacked tact, that he had in the beginning distrusted the white people so far that he would not believe them when they made accusations against his soldiers, and made no effort to bring to trial the soldier who had dragged Mrs. Evans to the ground by the hair, and discredited it.

It was shown that Macklin, the officer of the day, had disappeared from duty and could not be found when the shooting took place. All the negro soldiers who had been in the row, who had been in friction with the white people, belonged to Macklin's company. He was officer of the day, and when this thing happened he was out of the quarters somewhere in a back room and could not be discovered, and did not know of it until an hour after roll call.

Yet it took four months, and nothing but the prodding of the Senator from Ohio and the prodding of the press ever brought about a consideration in the Executive Office that somebody had been seriously derelict, and that a court-martial ought to be ordered to find out whether these officers were not themselves to blame for this murder in Brownsville. Why did it take the President so long to set about a proper military investigation? I will leave that to others to answer. I do not know.

There is another fact: When the President changed front and made up his mind that he would convict the men of this conspiracy of silence and charge them with treason and mutiny in his impulsive way—and I am impulsive myself and must make allowances, I suppose-he goes to the other extreme and ignores the suggestion of Major Penrose after he had gotten out of this hornet's nest which had been raised. The dispatches show that there was dread in the mind of the War Department and of the President that if these troops were not removed, the white men of that community and around in that neighborhood there would, in their wrath and despair or in their rage, simply massacre the whole battalion. They were sneaked out in a manner, carried away, sent to Fort Reno, and then active efforts are begun to discover the real criminals.

Major Penrose, aroused at last to the necessity of trying to restore himself in a manner, suggested the only practical and sensible thing that was ever done or ever suggested-but it was not done. He recommended that three detectives be enlisted and assigned, one to each company; that all restrictions as to duty and patrol and everything else be taken off the men; that they be allowed to get a loose rein and get a loose tongue and go to drinking and one thing and another; and let three detectives who had been put in among them as officers of the law find out the real culprits. That practical suggestion was turned down by the general of the department, ignored by the War Department, ignored by the President, and he followed his own idea of having these men interrogated by Inspector-General Garlington, with the threat that if the good ones among you do not tell on the bad ones, we will have to punish all of you, innocent and guilty alike. But he has said it is not punishment. Of course I must not dispute his word, but it looks very nearly like punishment to take an innocent man and kick him out of the Army because there are some guilty ones in the same command with him. While, as I said, to sever the connection of these men with the Army is entirely too much punishment for those who have done nothing, it is entirely too little punishment for those who shot up Brownsville. So one would wish that Major Penrose's recommenda-tion had been followed, and that the detectives had been given an opportunity to try to ferret out the culprits.

But it was not done; and then in great haste, without waiting to see if something might not turn up which would disclose the culprits, the connection with the Army of the whole lot is severed, and they are roaming up and down the world now discredited. "Discredited," did I say? Why, Senators, they are the heroes of the hour among the 10,000,000 negroes in the They are martyrs in the cause of social United States. equality. They have been driven out of the Army by the act of their good friend Theodore Roosevelt-I mean the man they thought once was their apostle of equal rights. The negroes of the North have been passing resolutions of censure and condemnation and protest in conventions and in churches for the last several months. But if anyone can imagine that these 167 men are not to-day looked upon by the negroes in this country with admiration, then Senators here know nothing of the negro

Mr. TILLMAN. The President having refused, or the War

Department having refused or neglected, whichever way you choose to put it, to take any cognizance of the suggestion of Penrose to enlist detectives, the men having been turned out of the Army without honor, we find ourselves discussing here how to get at the real facts. The President, I understand, will send us a special message in a day or two, probably on Monday, with the evidence collected by the agent of the Department of Jus-tice, Mr. Purdy, which I expect will contain nothing more nor less than a legalized repetition, with some little elaboration of the known facts in the case. Mr. Purdy was sent down there of course for the purpose of getting at the facts, regardless of whom they might hurt, but with the undoubted expectation and belief that he would return with legal evidence to convict these troops of the crime, and to that extent justify the President's I presume that if the Senatorial committee shall go there, little or nothing else will be added to this, except the opportunity for cross-examination of the soldiers themselves, who will tell their tales as to where they were and how dead asleep they were, and how innocent of all complicity and possibility of knowledge, and all that kind of thing. So we will at the end of a month, or two months, be just as much in the dark, probably, as we are to-day as to who the real culprits are.

I want to call attention to a remarkable change of heart and of attitude at the War Department on this question. The Secretary of War, who is a man whom we all admire, and whose geniality and joviality and big-heartedness make a friend of every man who comes in contact with him, seems to be the author of the phrase "a conspiracy of silence." It seems to me that if we are to adopt that word, or that crime, in the Senate, and the country shall agree that there is such a crime, and that these soldiers have committed it, we ought to revise the Army Regulations and make provision in them for the punishment of The Secretary of War, who would primarily draft any additional article or regulation, can do no better, I take it, than to define what a "conspiracy of silence" is, and then provide for its punishment in the future, taking cognizance, of course, if he sees fit, that it need not apply to white troops, but shall be used only in case of negro troops.

The Secretary indulges, in his annual report, in some argumentation—special pleading I would call it if he had not been such an ornament to the bench once. I may, I think, with propriety call a fellow-Senator a special pleader, as I have done on occasions, but I would not like to charge a judge or an exjudge with indulging in that kind of thing. But here is something that the Secretary of War says:

Might not any community into which the War Department should send this battalion, in which it is known that there are from nine to twenty murderers, justly complain that the battalion is not a proper instrument for maintaining the supremacy of the law? Could we properly send such a battalion to the Philippines or Cuba to maintain peace or furnish an example of orderly conduct? If a similar outbreak were there to occur, could we relieve ourselves from responsibility for it on the theory that we could not detect the particular ten or twenty who were guilty of the first murder?

Yet I have shown that the records of the War Department showed (because I did not know anything about it until they sent them here) that these very men had been guilty of murder, murder, murder; that three separate and distinct times they had done this very thing in this very way. Yet he did not think it worth his while to heed the protests of the Senators So it looks from Texas to keep these men from Brownsville. to me like the Secretary had convicted himself if his argument in his annual report, a part of which is in the document, is to have any weight.

It may be that in the battalion are a number of men wholly innocent, who know neither who the guilty men are, nor any circumstances which will aid in their detection, though this can not be true of many. Because there may be innocent men in the battalion, must the Government continue to use it to guard communities of men, women, and children when it contains so dangerous an element impossible of detection? Certainly not. When a man enlists in the Army he knows that, for the very purpose of protecting itself, the Government reserves to itself the absolute right of discharge, not as a punishment, but for the public safety or interest. In such a case as this, the inconvenience and hardship to those innocent of participation or knowledge, arising from arbitrarily terminating the contract of enlistment in accordance with the right which the Government by statute reserves, must be borne by them in the public interest. It goes without saying that if the guilty could be ascertained they should and would be punished, but the guilty can not be ascertained, and the very impossibility of determining who are not guilty makes the whole battalion useless to the Government as an instrument for maintaining law and order. The only means of ridding the military service of a band of would-be murderers of women and children, and actual murderers of one man, is the discharge of the entire battalion.

Mr. President, in this connection it will be recalled that the It may be that in the battalion are a number of men wholly innocent,

Mr. President, in this connection it will be recalled that the other morning I asked the Senate to order from the Secretary of War the correspondence in the Athens, Ohio, case. ator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] happened to have the matter in his desk, and it was published as Senate Document 185. In that document the facts in the Athens case are something like this:

A man belonging to the Fourteenth Battery of Artillery had been arrested by the provost guard or the police, I do not know which. Anyhow, he was imprisoned. There was an encampment of the militia and regulars—a joint encampment—for the training of our military forces; and the behavior of the troops, both militia and regulars, was so bad that the citizens of Athens appealed for protection, and a provost guard was instituted. It happened that on this day, when the man belonging to the bat-tery was in jail for some misconduct, the provost guard consisted of some seven or eight militiamen. About 7 o'clock-it was in August and therefore it was not sundown; it was in broad daylight—some forty or fifty of this body of regulars, with their pistols or arms of some kind, made a concerted movement toward the jail for the purpose of releasing their comrade. Just as they reached the jail, or about the time they reached the jail, the provost guard came up and their officer commanded "Halt" to this body of men. The officer was the legal officer, having the legal right to give the order, the other men being no more than any other citizen or passer-by. The answer was a fusillade of shots by these white artillerymen, the officer being killed—shot down in cold blood—and four men wounded, and then everybody stampeded and broke. Two of the men of the artillery turned State's evidence, but before they would agree to testify they asked immunity, or rather they asked that they be transferred out of the battery, because their lives would not be worth having if they dared to disclose who were the actual The War Department very properly sent the Judge-Advocate-General or somebody from his office to look after the interests of the soldiers, and the Department of Justice was requested to deal with it or to give instructions to the district attorney at Cincinnati to take cognizance of the case and be present while the legal steps were being taken.

The officer representing the Judge-Advocate-General's office went to the city of Athens and made himself known to the attorney of the State, the solicitor or prosecutor, got all his facts, got copies, I believe, of some things with the understanding that he would not use them for the defense of the men charged with this crime. To sum up, this is the utterance of the district the district of t the distinguished Representative in Congress from that district, who had been employed to aid the State's attorney, who is a resident of that city, and whose own offices had been shot up or perforated with bullets. This is the summing up of the action of the War Department itself in dealing with these white culprits who murdered an officer of the National Guard of Ohio in the discharge of his duty. General Grosvenor, in writing to the Secretary of War, said:

And, in short, the district attorney of the United States and the representative of the War Department left nothing undone to prevent even the holding of these men, each and every one of them, to the grand jury, where a fuller and better investigation might be made. And I do not hesitate to state now that from the minute those shots were fired and from the minute that Corporal Clark lay dying on the streets there has not been left undone any thing or act by the Government of the United States that could be done to prevent an ascertainment of who the murderers were.

That is pretty bitter, or, rather, hot.

Here is another letter on the same subject. The Secretary of War himself was not primarily responsible for any of these transactions, because he was absent somewhere on one of his many expeditions of public necessity to Panama or Cuba—I do not know if to either of those places on that occasion—but we know the Secretary of War is always "holding down the lid" somehow or somewhere for the President, [Laughter.] So General Grosvenor writes this:

ATHENS, OHIO, December 19, 1904.

Hon. WILLIAM H. TAFT, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: I have your letter of December 17. It is possible that I may have exhibited "considerable heat" in my letter of the 30th of September. The murder of Clark was atroclous and infamous, in my judgment, and naturally our people felt terribly outraged. Coming home here, not having been present at the time of the murder, and finding my own office building sprinkled with bullet holes and the public sentiment at the very helght of intense, I may have communicated some of it to my letter.

But it is all over: the conspiracy to shield the murderers has been successful. All parties of the outrage were obliterated, and now let me summarize. Fifty to seventy men marched into the most public street of a village like this in the early hours of a pleasant summer evening and without the slightest provocation, meeting the provost guard, fire from fifty to seventy-five shots from loaded weapons, killing one, wounding two, and hitting a citizen, and firing into the windows and walls of the buildings. And yet all this has been obliterated as though the waves of the ocean had swept through sand. And not only that, but the Government officials—a representative of the War Department bearing a commission and a deputy United States district attorney—appeared in the town and manipulated the preliminary examination of witnesses and boildy denounced the prosecution. And we are powerless, and the blood of Clark, a fine young man of Warren County, Ohio, will go unavenged because of the interference of the United States Government through its officials.

If you wonder that there is some little "heat" out in this neighborhood, I think you would more fully appreciate it if you had a full statement of the situation as it actually occurred.

And so on; signed, C. H. GROSVENOR. Here is the Secretary's answer:

I should think it doubtful policy on the part of the Government to direct its officers to defend enlisted men against acts which as charged are certainly offenses against the State, unless there is some ground to presume that the acts are in the discharge of the lawful duties of the enlisted men. The action of the Acting Secretary of War, however, was based on the helplessness of the men, and the necessity that, no matter how guilty a man is, he is entitled to be defended by counsel. It probably would have been wiser had application been made to court for the assignment of counsel.

Still, an enlisted man is more or less a ward of the Government, and if the Government steps in merely to see that he is tried according to law, it seems to me that it is an exercise of a discretion which the Government has.

Government has

Well, Mr. President, with that attitude of the Secretary of War, then I have no cause of complaint. I feel that it was the duty of the War Department to see that those men should have a fair trial, supposing, of course, that the civil authorities in Ohio would not give them a fair trial, which I think must have been impossible. I can not conceive why it was neces-sary that the War Department should take the step which the Secretary had taken and act as it did in the destruction of the evidence. Finally, the upshot of it was that nobody was ever tried for the murder of Clark at all. One man was tried for riot, I believe, and convicted and sent to the penitentiary for a year and the other was fined something; some trivial punishment was meted out; but it was due entirely, as the distinguished Member of Congress from that district says, to the interference and meddling of the War Department. the two men who did turn State's evidence-what little evidence was given—were transferred by order of the War Department to another company, so that they might escape any unpleasant or dangerous consequences from their willingness to help see these offenders punished.

My purpose in bringing these matters up is merely to call attention to the remarkable change of front of the Secretary of War in regard to the enlisted man being a "ward of the Government." Is the white enlisted man a ward of the Gov-Government." Is the white enlisted man a ward of the Government and the black enlisted man not? Undoubtedly the War Department made preparations to see that these troops at Brownsville were going to be properly tried. They demanded guaranties of the civil authorities of Brownsville and of Texas that if the men were surrendered there should be no mob violence. They finally, however, became sufficiently alarmed to have charges of a military character lodged against them as an excuse not to surrender them to the civil authorities, ordering that if a warrant was tried to be served on them the answer would be, "These men are under military jurisdiction, to be tried by court-martial for this offense, and you can not get them." That went on until the grand jury, falling to have any direct or positive evidence, unable to indict the men—the guilty parties-although they had selected twelve men against whom suspicion was very strong, the grand jury finally being unable to find a true bill on the evidence then before it, immediately the charge of a military character was dropped. As soon as the civil authorities quit the military authorities quit, except to make effort by personal interrogation to get the men to betray their fellows or to convict themselves.

So it seems to me that there must be a considerable amount bungling here at headquarters. There was certainly a military crime committed. For instance, the racks were locked in which the rifles ought to have been. That is, the rule required that they should be locked, and yet all the guns were out that were in Brownsville that night. How did they get out? One rack was broken open; but it was said that the soldiers broke that open in their fright when the firing began, because they expected to be attacked by the citizens. The preposter-ous story is told here that these officers supposed that the gar-rison was being attacked; that they did not know any better, and did not take any steps to find out any better, until they sent Captain Lyons's company through the town to look up the absentees who had not appeared at the roll call. Of course Major Blocksom tells us that the roll call was a farce; that he had no confidence in it, and does not believe that the record is accurate or reliable. But we are told that within a half hour after the sound to arms, when these valiant troops had gotten their rifles and were lined up against the walls to defend them-selves from the assault of the murderous citizens of Brownsville, who were shivering in terror or rage elsewhere, with no arms, their houses perforated with bullets, their women and children just having escaped murder by a miracle, their chief of police shot down, a barkeeper murdered, and so on-I have gone over that-that within three-quarters of an hour, according to the statement of Major Penrose, when he dismissed two companies and kept one on duty. The next morning he looked to see if there were any foul guns, indicating that they had been fired off, and of course he found none. And yet with this knowledge the War Department took no steps to court-martial Major Penrose or to have an investigation of the conduct of the sergeant who held the keys. They merely relied on the cork-screw furnished Garlington, with a threat, "if you do not tell by such a day the President tells me to inform you that your What a drastic connection with the Army will be severed." method of getting facts!

We are informed in this correspondence somewhere-Major Blocksom, I think, is the source of the statement—that in the old days in dealing with colored troops it had been found necessary, in order to ferret out transgressors, to resort to sweatinganother ordinary punishment, I suppose, in the old Army—but in the modern method in dealing with these troops everything is relaxed. They are not given officers enough to keep control and direction over them; they are sent into territory where it is known caste feeling obtains, and when trouble comes prepara-tions are made to defend them. Then they turn around and go to the other extreme, and, instead of defense, they are turned out, discharged without honor—an entirely new punishment in I have not heard of it until within the last thirteen the Army. years, I believe. It originated in 1893, or somewhere in that neighborhood. There used to be an honorable discharge or a dishonorable discharge, and yet Senators, in their hairsplitting and with their effort at legal quibbling, contend that because the Articles of War provide this-

No enlisted man, duly sworn, shall be discharged from the service without a discharge in writing, signed by a field officer of the regiment to which he belongs, or by the commanding officer when no field officer is present; and no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before his term of service has expired except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial—the President is justified.

That article of war relates to the hold which the Government has on that man, not on the method by which the Government shall release that hold. It was designed to specify the knot around his neck. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Daniel] says that that knot is a hard knot so far as the soldier is concerned; a bow knot so far as the President is concerned. But in contradiction of that, I go for the foundation of my belief to the best-informed and most thoroughly effective man I have ever met in the War Department or any other Department of this Government, and that is F. C. Ainsworth. When called on by the President to give "some instances, of which he knows there must be many, where the commanding general of a department or the colonel of a regiment had discharged soldiers without honor or in any other way without court-martial," General Ainsworth says:

A protracted examination of the official records has thus far resulted in failure to discover a precedent in the Regular Army for the discharge of those members of three companies of the Twenty-fifth Infantry who were present on the night of August 13, 1906, when an affray in the city of Brownsville took place.

And further on he says:

No record of the summary discharge from the Regular Army, prior to the recent discharge of a battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, of a considerable number of enlisted men at one time has been found.

Very well; because it has never been done and there is no precedent is no reason why it can not be done. Senators have taken the fact that 352 enlisted men have been discharged without honor during the last fiscal year for one cause and another as a basis for the assertion that the President had the authority to discharge the men of these three companies. Well, as I said, I am going to leave the legal quibbling and hairsplitting and special pleading to the various Senators who shall choose to engage in it. They may be right and I may be wrong; but I lay down the fundamental proposition that if General Ainsworth has been unable to find anything like this in the records of the Army for a hundred years, a very queer condition of affairs exists, and it is sufficient for me to declare the President exceeded his authority.

Mr. CULBERSON. From which letter does the Senator from South Carolina-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, with pleasure, always.
Mr. CULBERSON. From which letter of General Ainsworth does the Senator read?

Mr. TILLMAN. I read from the memorandum-Mr. CULBERSON. On what page of this book?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will have to get the book now and find it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well; I will not disturb the Sena-

Mr. TILLMAN. But it is in there.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call the Senator's attention to appendix 3, page 537, and if the Senator will permit me to read a paragraph, I will do so.

Mr. TILLMAN. Surely. Mr. CULBERSON (reading) -

In the volunteer service, during the civil war, there occurred numerous instances of the summary discharge of large numbers of men because of misconduct on their part.

Then follow a number of instances given by Gen. F. C. Ainsworth, to whom the Senator paid such a justly high compliment a moment ago.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will examine pages 311, 312, and 313 he will find the whole memorandum from which he has just now read and the two opinions I just now read. They are all together. Both of them are memoranda to the Secretary of War

I call the Senator's attention that the facts of which he has just spoken, quoting from General Ainsworth, apply to volunteers during war times, not to the regulars in peace times. commanding general in the field, charged with the destruction of the enemy and the preservation of his own forces, has always been given unlimited power to do whatever, in his judgment, was best; but the Commander in Chief, under the Constifution-

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from Texas?
Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. I turn to the page to which the Senator referred me—page 310. I call his attention to the case known as the "Lee case," in which a company of the Eighth Infantry was discharged by Lieutenant-Colonel Lee, of the Second Cavalry, in time of peace.

Mr. TILLMAN. Wait a minute, now. And I call the Senator's attention to the very same Lee case, in the next paragraph to the bottom, on page 311, where General Ainsworth says:

In view of the foregoing statement it will be seen that the action taken in 1860 in the case of Company G, Eighth Infantry, is not a precedent for the action taken in 1906 in the case of members of the Twenty-fifth Infantry.

So General Ainsworth expressly declares that the Lee case does not apply.

As I said a moment ago, Mr. President, a commanding general in the field, confronting an enemy, environed with danger, charged with the destruction of that enemy and with the preservation of his own forces, always has been given carte blanche as to his authority to do whatever he saw fit; but the President of the United States is supposed to be governed by the Constitution of the land, by the laws of Congress, and by the Articles of War which he himself has promulgated. I ask the Senator-I ask any Senator-to cite me to an article of war which refers to a crime known as the "conspiracy of silence." And yet this conspiracy of silence is the only thing with a shadow of foundation in it for the President's action, because the question of mutiny and of treason are not to be thought of, and as for murder, the President himself and his subordinates have taken the steps, or have permitted the steps to be taken, which have practically destroyed the only chance to convict or to find out the men who did commit the crime.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, always.
Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me for just a sentence or two in explanation of the question to which I invited his attention, I do not agree that it is necessary for the President's order of discharge to be based upon the commission of any crime that is stated in the Articles of War. There is a distinction between a discharge for the good of the service and a prosecution and conviction of soldiers guilty of criminal offenses named in the Articles of War. But taking the Senator's position, Mr. President, on the subject, he will observe, I think, that he is in direct opposition to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] on this point, as he is on some other

Mr. TILLMAN. We have not had any conference. The attorneys have not been together on it at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULBERSON. It would have been very well if they had. I call the Senator's attention to the sixty-second article of war.

ART. 62. All crimes not capital, and all disorders and neglects, which officers and soldiers may be guilty of, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, though not mentioned in the foregoing articles of war, are to be taken cognizance of by a general, or a regimental, garrison, or field officers' court-martial, according to the nature and degree of the offense, and punished at the discretion of such court.

Mr. TILLMAN. Surely; but a court-martial is involved every time.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well. That is not the Senator's contention, however, and I expressly stated that I did not agree with him in the idea that there could not be a discharge unless a criminal offense had been committed; but the Senator's position was that no man could point to the Articles of War to show that these soldiers had committed an offense.

Mr. TILLMAN. I said the "conspiracy of silence." not say anything about their not having committed an offense. I believe they committed murder, some of them, but not the 167 of them.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well, Mr. President. I ask the Senator if he believes that the soldiers entered into a conspiracy to suppress the facts, as the President states, if they are not, therefore, guilty of such disorder and neglect to the prejudice of good order and military discipline under which they could be dismissed from the service?

Mr. TILLMAN. If tried by court-martial, yes; always tried by court-martial. I do not deny it. I say they ought to have been tried by court-martial. I say they ought to have been tried by court-martial order immediately after the occurrence, as soon as Major Blocksom's first report reached the War Depart-

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will eall the attention of Senators to the rule of the Senate requiring Senators to address the Chair.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not think there is a particle of danger

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I want, if I can, not-withstanding the Senator's reflection upon the fine-spun theo-ries of lawyers, to have him go back to the fundamental fact that the President, the Secretary of War, and the commander of a department may dismiss and discharge enlisted men from the Army without reference to the criminal offenses enumerated in the Articles of War. In addition to that, wherever the Articles of War provide for it, they may be tried as criminals by a court-martial and convicted, if the evidence necessitates it.

The proposition of the Senator was different. As I understood him, he said no man could point out in the Articles of War a provision indicating that these men, if guilty of a conspiracy to suppress the facts, were guilty of an offense against It happens in this case, in my judgment, that there the law. were sufficient reasons for the President to discharge these men in the interest of military discipline and the good of the service. If the individuals could be reached and a court-martial had the facts, so far as individuals were concerned, they could, in addition to the discharge, be punished under the sixty-second article of war. That is the proposition.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have, as I think, or have tried to-I may have slipped a word which did not say what I meant-I tried to show that the article which the Senator has just read, and which I myself read, in regard to the method of enlisted men being discharged applied and is intended to describe the hold of the War Department on the man. It does not apply and was not intended to apply to the methods of punishment of a man.

Mr. CULBERSON. It uses the word "punished."

Mr. TILLMAN. Where?

Mr. CULBERSON. In the last line of article 62.
Mr. TILLMAN. I am not talking about article 62. I will speak about this provision in article 62 after having read this other:

No enlisted man, duly sworn, shall be discharged from the service without a discharge in writing, signed by a field officer of the regiment to which he belongs, or by the commanding officer when no field officer is present; and no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before his term of service has expired except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial.

The Senator alluded to that, did he not?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well. Mr. CULBERSON. That is a discharge.

Mr. TILLMAN. And I say that that language does not imply the power of the President to discharge a whole battalion at once. It applies to individual men only, and it has reference to the limitation of the man's right, rather than any declaration of the Government's power.

As to that sixty-second article of war, the provision there is always for a court-martial. These men never had any courtmartial; there has never been even a court of inquiry; there has Ohio. There murder was committed, and murder against the never been any honest effort of the War Department, through its usual military channels or methods, to arrive at the facts, except by the Inspector-General's Office.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. I take the liberty to ask the Senator one other question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will answer it, if I can.

Mr. CULBERSON. I know the Senator will try. Mr. TILLMAN. I said I would try.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator has said, Mr. President, that the fourth article of war authorizes the President to discharge individuals, not whole companies. Now, suppose a case. Mr. TILLMAN. Upon conditions; under special surroundings

Mr. CULBERSON. That is an addition to the Senator's previous statement.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, well, I am so used to saying things directly that sometimes I do not elaborate enough. The Senator is used to elaboration, and he is, therefore, always clear. I am sometimes obscure.

Mr. CULBERSON. The question I will ask the Senator needs no elaboration. I will suppose a case. As a matter of fact, the President discharged individuals in this battalion by name. Now, I will ask the Senator-

Mr. TILLMAN. He did that merely to get around the other provision.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not know about that. However, let me ask the Senator the question which I have in mind. That is this: Suppose it were true that every member of this battalion joined in firing a volley at the time this man was mur-Does the Senator take the position that the President could discharge only one man and could not discharge the whole battalion, notwithstanding each man was individually and identically guilty of the same act at the same time?

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator knows me too well to believe that I am that big a fool, even though he is given as a great lawyer to badgering lawyers on the other side and getting them in a hole, to use a slang phrase. He knows perfectly well that if all those men could be convicted legally, by court-martial or in a civil court, of having together, jointly, by platoon, or whatever other method, and of having fired and of having killed one man, the whole gang would be in the same boat, charged with murder.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is all I wanted to get the Senator to admit.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator did not expect me not to admit it, did he? But instead of the whole 167 being guilty of having fired and shot up the town of Brownsville and killed a man and wounded another and frightened women and children, nobody, any time or anywhere, citizens' committee or otherwise, has said the whole battalion was engaged, and yet a hundred and sixty-seven are punished, or, as I said, made martyrs of, to roam up and down the land. Of course none of these negroes are going back to Texas. One of them, it is said, comes from South Carolina. That is the famous Sergeant Mingo Sanders, who had been in the Army twenty-seven years. I do not know anything about Mingo. I should like to meet him and shake his hand. But Mingo is not going back to South Carolina and let it be known he is Mingo.

Why not? Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. TILLMAN. Simply because the suspicion that will obtain in that country that he may be the fellow who did the killing will make it unhealthy for him down there. That is why not. I wish it was not so. We can not help it. If Mingo had been discharged honorably, after a court-martial had shown that he was innocent, he could go back there and be the biggest man at the camp meetings of the negroes of the whole country around, and the white people would treat him kindly and cordially, and all that sort of thing. But the suspicion of him that he may be the one who fired the shot that killed that young fellow at Brownsville renders it unhealthy for him to go back. I say that as a matter of information.

What would probably happen to him? Mr. FORAKER.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, I am not going to get off on that point. am going to discuss the race question directly. Do not fret. I am going to get right down to the milk in the cocoanut. not want the fire alarm to go off until the bell rings. [Laughter.]

I was calling attention, I believe, when I was interrupted and sidetracked, to the difference of treatment accorded these negro troops and the members of the company of artillery at Athens, lawful authority. The murder at Brownsville was an accident rather than anything else. That is, they did not intend to shoot at that particular man because they knew him specifically, I imagine. They shot at the chief of police because he was approaching, and probably he might discover somebody. They killed his horse and tried to kill him. The barkeeper was shot down, I presume, because at that bar the negroes had been desired the reight of chief the reight. nied the privilege of drinking with white men at the same time That is also denied them in Washington. Negroes and place. are not allowed to drink at all the bars in Washington, and you all know it.

I tried to show what would have been the proper action of the War Department in defending their man or their men in Athens. If they had gone about it openly, if they had not first got the State's case and then gone to the witnesses in the jail who had turned State's evidence and tried to persuade them not to testify, if they had not acted in a rather underhand and unprofessional, dishonorable way, it would have been perfectly legitimate for the War Department to furnish legal help to see that their soldiers were properly cared for in court. But I do not understand the kind of reasoning which makes it right for the Secretary of War to help white troops who are in trouble and then convict negro troops who are in trouble of a crime which is not in the war regulations—this conspiracy of silence.

Of course I think it would have been better all around, for the negroes especially, if the men who are really guilty at Brownsville could have been discovered and punished by the civil authorities or the military authorities; it would not matter which, just so they were punished adequately. I believe it will be a great misfortune to the negro race that that has been rendered impossible by the action of the War Department and the President himself, because this Brownsville incident is not going to drop out of sight. It is too important a phase of the race question in general to be allowed to disappear from public view.

Here is another illustration of the trend of thought and feeling on the subject, copied from the Army and Navy Journal. will have this printed. I will not undertake to read it. One article is the "Color line in the Army," in which an officer whose name is not signed discusses the wisdom of retaining in the Army the two regiments of colored infantry and the two regiments of colored cavalry provided for by law. I have been informed—and somebody will probably enlighten me specific-I have been ally—that five years ago the then civil governor of the Philippines, who I believe is the present Secretary of War—certainly if not he, his predecessor—urged the War Department to remove the negro troops from the Philippines for reasons, I suppose, satisfactory to himself. I should like to get the letter. haps some Senator may be able to look it up before the debate is over and get all the sides of this proposition, certainly in view of the fact that the War Department has now ordered all these negro men back to the Philippines.

But what I was bringing out more particularly is the account of the murder of Lieutenant Calvert in the Philippines a short while ago by Sergeant Taylor of his company. They belonged to the Ninth Cavalry, a negro regiment, and Calvert was murdered in cold blood in his tent by this negro sergeant under circumstances of brutality and savagery that must make men pause and think.

Also, the newspapers have been full in the last two weeks of statements to the effect that a conspiracy entered into by their negro troops had been discovered to murder the officers of the other companies of the Twenty-fifth Regiment. I do not know whether this is a part of the press-agency arrangement by which the President's drastic action in regard to the Twenty-fifth Infantry will be bolstered up by exciting public opinion against the negro race generally. I have no such desire or purpose. I am charged with it. I am charged with being a firebrand, of going up and down the country delivering lectures which are productive of race hatred and all that sort of thing. I say I want this letter published in the Army and Navy Journal put into the RECORD and let the people see just how Lieutenant Calvert was butchered by this faithful negro sergeant of his.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COLOR LINE IN THE ARMY.

COLOR LINE IN THE ARMY.

In an article in the North American Review entitled "The Color Line in the Army," Capt. Matthew F. Steele, United States Army, presents a very interesting and forcible argument in favor of the repeal of sections 1104 and 1108, Revised Statutes, providing for the enlistment of two cavalry and two infantry regiments composed of colored men. He considers this law the equivalent of the Jim Crow laws of the South, and says that "no more exclusive law can be found in the codes of Alabama and Mississippi. It is out of date, contrary to the spirit of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution and to the good sense of the twentieth century." Recruiting officers should, he holds, enlist the best men to be had, without distinction of color, and each man should be assigned to a regiment according to his choice and the best interests of the military service.

The law is a recognition by act of Congress of the national prejudice against the negro soldier. Within the Army itself there is no prejudice against the colored regiments, and the fine work they have done is appreciated. If officers do not desire assignments to a colored regiment, it is because of the civilian prejudice, which is national and not local. There is to-day a larger proportion of officers in the colored regiments from the South than from any other equal section of the country. Shipp and Smith, who laid down their lives heroically leading their colored troops at San Juan, were both southerners. Captain Steele says:

Shipp and Smith, who laid down their lives heroically leading their colored troops at San Juan, were both southerners. Captain Steele says:

"There is a cavalry post in Vermont, but no colored troop has ever been, or is likely ever to be, stationed there. The people of Vermont do not want them. New Englanders have always peculiarly loved the negro, but they do not love him in their midst; they prefer him away in Georgia or Louisiana, whither they can send him their sympathy by mail. A few years ago a fine troop of the Ninth Cavalry was stationed at Fort Myer, across the way from the national capital, as a reward for specially good service in an Indian campaign. Never a word of complaint was made against the behavior of this troop, yet it is well known that never again will a colored troop be ordered to that post for station. The people of Washington do not want them. It is a notorious fact in the Army that the political clique which holds the Yellowstone Park, the great national pleasure ground, in the hollow of its fist will never allow colored troops to be stationed in the park. They are afraid that their patrons, the American travelers, will resent being held to the regulations of the park by negro troopers.

"Since the disturbance at Brownsville the broad State of Texas is no doubt closed forever against the negro regiments. When orders were issued a couple of years ago, sending a squadron of colored cavalry to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., letters of protest are reported to have been sent to the War Department by prominent persons of the adjacent town of Leavenworth. It has been proclaimed by the public press that negro troops must not be placed at the garrisons in the Southern States, and the Department has never yet ventured to station them in any of the Eastern or Middle-Western States. The national prejudice has followed the flag across the Pacific Ocean. Five years ago the colored regiments on duty in the Philippines were returned to the States at the demand of the civil governor of the islands."

MURDER OF LIEUTENANT CALVERT.

We are indebted to an officer of the Army for a copy of a private letter giving an account of the shooting of Lieut. Edward Calvert, Ninth Cavalry, by Sergeant Taylor. It is as follows:

"Sergeant Taylor, who was the company quartermaster-sergeant of Company M, Twenty-fourth Infantry, seems to have been giving Mr. Calvert a great deal of trouble ever since we have been over here, as he has been drinking 'blino,' and seems to have gone all to pieces. Ordinarily he was a quiet, well-behaved soldier, with almost twenty-three years' service to his credit, has several excellent discharges, and was one of Captain Cabaniss's trusted noncommissioned officers. But the conditions over here seem to turn things upside down, and the one you least expect to do so goes wrong.

"Mr. Calvert, in command of Company M, was stationed at Albuera, a little barrio about 9 miles from Ormoc. He was the only officer with the company, as Mr. Fulton had dislocated his shoulder and had been at Camp Downes, Ormoc, for some time. It seems that Sergeant Taylor had been giving a great deal of trouble, and Mr. Calvert had thought he would have to 'break' (reduce) him. On this Tuesday morning Mr. Calvert was heard to tell Sergeant Taylor to go up to his (Mr. C.'s) shack and wait for him there, as he wished to speak to him, and Taylor replied, 'You go first.' Of course Mr. Calvert ordered him to obey, and he did so. A little later on Mr. Calvert went into his shack, and what occurred inside no one will probably ever know, as there were no witnesses present except a Filipino boy, who could understand no English, and who jumped out of the window at the first shot.

"But there was evidently quite an argument or altercation of some kind, and a trumpeter who was at the back of the house working heard Mr. Calvert say: 'Sergeant, I am fast losing all patience with you,' and Taylor replied: 'I am losing patience with you, too,' and then the firing commenced. He (Taylor) shot him twice wh blew off the top of his head, remarking:

"Neither Cameron (the hospital corps man) nor anybody else will do you any good now."

"The other noncommissioned officers at once put him under arrest and placed a guard over Mr. Calvert's body and sent word at once to Camp Downes, and when Mr. Fulton got there he said the entire company seemed to feel terribly grieved and that many of the men were in tears. They (Company M) wrote a letter of condolence to Mrs. Jackson (Mr. Calvert's mother), doing this of their own accord.

"It is said Taylor does not seem to feel any remorse for his deed, and made the remark: 'The lieutenant was game until after I fired the second shot.'

"His plea is going to be that of self-defense, as he claims that Mr. Calvert drew his revolver on him first; but this is not believed, and even if true would not justify the last three shots, which were fired as Mr. Calvert was trying to get away.

"It certainly is one of the most terrible things I have ever known; but it is just another one, though, of the many prices the United States is paying for these miserable islands.

"Later.—We heard yesterday that the court-martial at Iloilo had sentenced Taylor, Mr. Calvert's murderer, to be hanged, but that the civil authorities had issued a writ of habeas corpus, claiming that it was in time of peace and that a court-martial had no jurisdiction.

"They may call it 'peace' if they want to, but when there are parts of three regiments—Eighth, Thirteenth, and Twenty-fourth Infantry—in the field, besides all the scouts and constabulary they could get on the island, gunboats patroling the coasts, and men being killed like Lieutenant James, Doctor Snyder, Mr. Williams, and the four enlisted men of the Eighth, to say nothing of the engagements that were fought, I have another name for it."

Mr. TILLMAN. Now I come to the question of mob violence.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now I come to the question of mob violence in Texas. The War Department in its dispatches showed great interest and earnestness and dread lest if the men under accusation were surrendered they could not be defended, and, as I say, they were sneaked out of Brownsville because of the dread that if it were known that they were being carried away some-body somewhere might meet the train and have a lynching. I want to ask anybody here whether, if these had been white soldiers, there would have been a word said about mob violence? Everybody knows there would not have been. The men under suspicion would have been surrendered to the civil authorities, as the law requires. The War Department might have sent the Judge-Advocate-General to defend them, as it had a right to do. The matter would have been tested in the courts, the guilt or the innocence of the men under accusation would have been established, and the thing would have been settled in a proper

But, Mr. President, while it has been said by the President himself that this action of his was not influenced by race at all, that the race question is not involved, that there is no relationship between the color of the men and the official action taken by the War Department and the Executive, it appears to me to be idle to deny it. Senators have deprecated the entry into this discussion of the race question in general. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] says he does not want to discuss that question. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Daniel] is equally earnest in the desire that it shall not be injected here or elsewhere. But what is the use for us to ignore a plain and palpable fact? If the race question looms up here as prominently as the Washington Monument looms across the western horizon, what is the use for us to shun and to dread its discussion? While I was not in the Chamber, accidentally being out, it warmed the cockles of my heart to read in the RECORD the story of how this Chamber, by unanimous vote, put its opinion in the law that the great war of 1861-1865 was not a war of rebellion. but a war between the States-a civil war.

I claim the right to say that I know as much about northern public opinion at this time on the race question as any man in this Chamber. In the last four months I have addressed not less than 100,000 people in picked audiences throughout the North, mainly on this question. I find there, wherever I have gone, the same sentiment of lack of sectionalism and of animosity to each other that was shown here yesterday. The people of the North no longer hate the South, and the people of the South have forgiven the North for the wrongs and injuries. [Laughter.] Oh, well, Senators laugh. I will illustrate it. I was speaking about the terrible sacrifice that the race problem had cost this country-500,000 lives, billions of treasure-no one knows how many-six or eight; the tears and blood that we offered up on the altar of patriotism in 1861-1865 to settle the race question. Some man spoke up and said, "There was not any bloodshed north of Mason and Dixon's line." I said: "No; and if the people north of Mason and Dixon's line had stayed at home, there would not have been any bloodshed at all." I am not going into the merits of that proposition. I am not going to harass the souls of people here by saying that the people of the North had no right to go South. I ask you to agree that the southern soldiers fought for what they believed to be right, and showed it by dying for That is all I ask.

But that sacrifice to settle the race question, so far from having been effective, is acknowledged to have been absolutely wasted and worthless. We settled slavery and we settled the question of nationality. We destroyed one, and we settled for-ever the proposition as to whether we were a confederation or a nation. We are a nation with a big N. But the southern half of this country has no conception of the word "nation" except that it is connected with the word "nigger." More's the pity!

When I want to be entirely respectful and conservative, I sometimes write a few words to read, and in all seriousness, with all the solemnity of which I am capable, I wish to address myself very briefly to the race problem in general.

I do not understand the tactics of those who do not wish the race question discussed and I have no patience with such shortsighted and cowardly action. There is really nothing else involved except the race question, and the difficulties and dangers which environ it should make us the more anxious to begin to consider it calmly and dispassionately before other and more dire calamities come to us from it. Broadly stated, the white people of the United States are face to face with the vital issue as to whether the Caucasian race shall share its inheritance with the other races of the earth. In Cuba the question presses for solution and immediate action. Shall that island be governed by negroes or white men? Shall it be doomed to the fate of Santo Domingo or shall it be saved for the white man? The question of a protectorate or annexation and of the future status of the people there must be determined in the near future.

Now, I can elaborate this a little by pointing you to the fact that but for the existence in Cuba of the large negro population-which demands absolute equality in government, with the right to elect a majority of that Government, if it is able to do so, and have that Government run by negroes—there would have been no insurrection. I do not hesitate to declare my be-lief that that insurrection was manufactured in New York and the arms furnished and the money to finance it, the negroes encouraged to rebel or to rise against Palma's Government and produce a condition which made him plead to the United States, "Come and save us." So the Secretary of War was sent there, our ships were hurried to Habana, the Secretary giving place to Mr. Magoon, who is now there in control.

I saw in the newspapers in the last week, in the Star and the New York Herald, statements which indicate that the sugar planters intend to blow up the railroads of the English company before they will allow the negroes to govern there, in order to compel the United States Government to assume a protectorate or annex the island, one or the other. When you search for the motive you are compelled to agree that the whole scheme is one to bring the sugar plantations owned by New York and English capitalists within the tariff wall of the United States Government, so that they can sell their sugar in our markets without paying the tariff duty. That is only one phase and a very small phase of the race question.

On the Pacific coast the relationship between the Mongolians and the Caucasians is involved. The President announces himself as favoring the policy of absolute obliteration of the race line, the granting of full citizenship to the Japanese. The Americans of the Pacific coast, as I understand it, are bitterly opposed to this policy, and without regard to party lines. These Americans ought to know what is for their best interest, and they ought to and undoubtedly will have the sympathy and aid of their fellow-citizens North and South in protecting their interests. But these two phases of the race problem sink into insignificance alongside of the greater and more vital question of the relationship of the races in the Southern States of this my feet and ask any and everybody to argue from the fact.

In six Southern States—South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana-in the aggregate the negroes outnumber the whites and in two of them-South Carolina and Mississippi-the negro preponderance is very heavy. Here are the figures from the census of 1900:

State.	White.	Negro.
South Carolina. Georgía Alabama. Florida Mississippi Louisiana	557, 995 1, 181, 518 1, 001, 390 297, 812 643, 640 730, 821	782, 321 1, 034, 813 827, 307 230, 730 907, 630 650, 804
Total	4, 413, 176	4, 433, 605

In two of those States-South Carolina and Mississippi-that compact group, with an area larger than France and capable of supporting a population as large as that of France, the negroes outnumber the whites. In our State there are 225,000 more negroes than whites, and in Mississippi two hundred and sixtyodd thousand more negroes than whites.

Under the law-the fourteenth and fifteenth amendmentsthese people possess every right that white men have, as far as the Federal Constitution confers rights, and the fifteenth amendment expressly forbids the enactment of any law which shall discriminate in voting on account of race or color. Large numbers of these negroes are disfranchised at this time, but these laws are only temporary and work no cure; they are only palliatives and offer us only a breathing spell, and in the near future enough negroes will be able to vote, under laws which we ourselves have passed, and we have exhausted all expedients, to outvote us. Can anybody undertake to say that there will not then come a struggle for mastery between the two races.

In Cuba the color line has been obliterated and miscegenation is in full blast. At the North the same conditions exist, and the large number of mulattoes and quadroons with white blood in their veins who have migrated there are the leaders of the doctrine of absolute social equality, encouraged as they have this from his message on the Brownsville affair:

It is of the utmost importance to all of our people that we shall deal with each man on his merit as a man, and not deal with him merely as a member of a given race; that we shall judge each man by his conduct and not his color.

And again:

Every farsighted friend of the colored race in its efforts to strive onward and upward, should teach first, as the most important lesson, alike to the white man and the black, the duty of treating the individual man strictly on his worth as he shows it.

Consider the full import and meaning of these words and then consider whether or not they are sincere and honest or whether in the fervor of a fight to justify an unwarranted usurpation of power and exercise of executive authority the President forgot himself and said more than he intended or means. To illustrate, is it possible or desirable that all consideration of race and color shall be dismissed from our minds and not govern our action; that radical instincts implanted in us by nature are to be ignored and all men of all races to be judged and treated on the basis of "individual merit?" Are men to be made over and the caste feeling and race antagonisms of centuries to disappear in the universal brotherhood of man? Are there any Senators in this Chamber who subscribe to this doctrine who would have the Caucasian, highest and noblest of the five races as is attested by history, descend to the level of the others and share his birthright with them with the inevitable result that pure white blood will disappear from the face of the earth, and after the mixing of centuries shall have completed the amalgamation, have all men of one skin and one type? Is President Roosevelt ready to act up to his own theory and have his children marry men and women of the other races? Would be accept as a daughter-in-law a Chinese, a Malay, an Indian, or a negro in accord with the doctrine laid down in his message which I have quoted? We all know he would not, and while "fine words butter no parsnips" words like these are a source of incalculable evil.

I have pointed out to you that his utterances in the official order No. 26 and in his letter to Admiral Rogers had induced the negroes to believe that they had a right to demand and to assert the right of absolute equality.

The southern white men and women who have for forty years resisted in every possible way this doctrine of the equality of the races are just as resolved now as they have always been not to submit to it or its results. They are resolved to maintain control of their State governments and to prevent in every way possible social and political equality, with the inevitable destruction of their civilization which would follow if they yielded. The conditions are growing more and more aggravated every day. Race antagonism increases in intensity. Are things to drift until direful tragedies multiply on every hand and blood shall flow like water? Is the statesmanship of our time in-adequate to cope with this question, just as the statesmanship of 1860 failed to prevent the dire catastrophe of civil war? That war was fought to settle the race question, but forty years after its termination we find conditions more threatening in some of their aspects than they were in 1861.

It is not possible for me to believe that the theorists and sentimentalists at the North, who are responsible for the conditions existing, will be allowed to pursue their policy of absolute recognition of race equality much further. They settled the war entirely contrary to common sense, I may say-I mean the result of the war. They went to war to destroy slavery and to restore the Union. If they had stopped there, we would have none of this trouble on our hands now. This question would have been allowed to evolute naturally, and we would have been permitted to give to those negroes who may have shown themselves qualified and proper to hold the ballot the right to vote. But we have made this mistake of enfranchising a race, slaves last week, barbarians three generations ago. If it was a mistake, why not say so? And why not retrace our steps?

I do not believe that the northern people want to settle this question in any other way than will be best for the interests of the white people of the Pacific coast and of the Southern States, if they only knew how to go about it. I give the people of the North credit for being just as good and noble-hearted and generous in their wishes to do justice as I claim for ourselves. It is not a local question, nor is it a sectional question, except in so far as there are more negroes in the South than there are in the North. We are face to face with the ne-You have got a few thousand. My county has got more than all New England.

I plead with Senators here not to ignore the gravity of the situation, not to allow things to go on as they are going on now, involving a struggle for mastery between the races in the South, coupled with the direful tragedies that will come, because the white people are resolved to maintain their civilization and protect their women. It is a serious obligation of duty, and if I do nothing else in this debate than to have the subject presented broadly from the standpoint of patriotism and of statesmanship by somebody else, I will welcome the opportunity to give some more facts when the time comes. This Brownsville incident would never have attracted a thousandth part of the interest it has but for the fact that this great underlying question is in-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TILLMAN. I was about through, but I will yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was merely going to ask a question which is pertinent, I think. The Senator has spoken with a great deal of vigor on the race question. Could the Senator suggest to the Senate what the solution of the race question is? What is he going to do about it?

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, that would involve another couple of hours, and I have already trespassed long enough on the attention of the Senate to-day. I hope the Senator from Indiana, who is himself a brilliant statesman, will be able to give us some suggestion as to what we ought to do about it. I merely point out a great and a tragic situation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from Indiana? Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has taken two hours in stating the existence of a condition to which he says he has given very great study, and I know that is true, and he has referred to the question of statesmanship. I am satisfied that I voice the opinion of my colleagues here when I say that the Senate would be delighted to give him two hours more if he will now state the remedy which in all his study has suggested itself to him.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will do that later in the debate, perhaps. Just at this time, fatigued as I am and having just gotten up out of a sick bed, I shall not undertake to go into any further discussion of this question. I merely have tried, in my feeble and humble way, to point out that we in the South are on the crest of a volcano. We are environed with dangers of which the people of the North have no conception, and we realize the fearful tragedies that are near in front of us unless something can be done to ameliorate conditions. That is all. We are not responsible for the situation. We can not change the condition. The discussion, or rather the action, must come from those who precipitated this condition, who are responsible for it now, and who will be responsible for its continuous existence. I am ready to contribute in my humble way, both with facts and arguments, when the time comes.

It is high time something was being done to have this great and vital question brought before the country in some practical and sensible way. The deep interest shown in the Brownsville tragedy is ample evidence that the people of the country are beginning to feel a deep concern in the various phases of this question, and it is absolutely useless for doctrinaires and politicians to undertake to pooh pooh the question and dismiss it with a wave of the hand, and for one I am ready to go to battle under the slogan, "America for the Americans, and this is a white man's country and white men must govern it.'

I beg the Senate's pardon for having trespassed this long. have no idea that I have converted anybody to my belief in regard to the Brownsville business. I still stand by the fundamental doctrine that the innocent ought not to be punished because there were some guilty, and I think the President has made some very grave blunders in dealing with this subject.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I understand it is the desire of those who are in charge of the resolution that is under discussion to have it brought to a vote on Monday. sult of the speech of the Senator from South Carolina I feel that I should not allow the discussion to close without saying something upon the subject.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply wish to state that the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] told me a while ago that he would like to have an opportunity of speaking this afternoon for some thirty I told him that so far as the appropriation or forty minutes. bill was concerned I would consent that that might be done, if the will of the Senate was such. He is present and ready to take the floor, I understand, for the purpose of making the speech he desires to make and of which he had given me notice that he would like to make this afternoon.

Mr. MALLORY: I am much obliged to

I am much obliged to the Senator from Illinois, but if the Senator from Colorado desires to proceed I do not wish to interfere with him.

Mr. PATTERSON. Now that I am up, I would prefer to proceed rather than to allow the matter to go over until Monday. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, so far as the legal questions involved in this controversy are concerned, I will not undertake to discuss them. I am convinced that, as a legal proposition, measured by the rules and Articles of War, the President had the right to order the discharge of the battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry as he did. Whether it was wise for him to take that action is another question; and when the argument made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is placed side by side with the arguments made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Daniel] and others on that side of the question, the wisdom of his action must be determined by each one for him-

I have no doubt that the President in making the order of discharge was moved by the highest and most patriotic mo-tives. Whatever may be said on the subject of race prejudice and about race prejudice being at the bottom of the Brownsville incident, surely the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] will not maintain that the action of the President in discharging the battalion was the result of race prejudice. It is not so very long ago that the President was subjected to considerable censure, I think, from the same Senator and from those who think with him because a colored man—perhaps the highest and best type of colored man in the United Stateslunched with the President at the White House. If race prejudice did not direct the action of the President, then I think we should all conclude that his purpose was a perfectly proper one; that it was to enforce discipline in the Army, and, as far as it was possible for him, to prevent a recurrence of like tragedies with that of Brownsville in the future.

That is all, Mr. President, I desire to say about the Browns-I do, however, wish to take issue with the Senator from South Carolina as to many of his utterances that related to the negro and involved the race question. I will do so because I am a Democrat, and as a Democrat by my silence I do not want to be held responsible for what he has said upon this subject, or that it may be supposed at home that I am in sympathy with his views.

Mr. President, when the next Congress convenes there will be just two Democratic Senators from the North in this great body. In the present Congress there are but four Democratic Senators from the North, and unless there is a change between now and two years hence, when new Senators will be elected, I fear that this Chamber will be divided solidly Republican from the North and solidly Democratic from the South. Whether it may be the fault of parties or platforms or issues, this country, politically speaking and judging from elections and the political complexion of this body, is intensely sectional; and I am willing to submit to the country whether speeches such as the one just closed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] are calculated to soften the asperities that lead to sectionalism or to give a more patriotic division of political power between the States of the Union.

The North can lay no particular claim to a desire for justice for the negro-no more than the South. I recall very well when in many of the northern legislatures there were negro members. I recall very well when a Republican President did not hesitate to appoint worthy and capable negroes to high offices. recall very well when it was the fond hope of the people of this country, with apparently ample grounds upon which to expect the realization of the hope, that the race issue would in time disappear, and that the time would come when manhood and worth, education and intelligence would settle every dispute and when color would prove no substantial bar to equality in all things before the law.

But, Mr. President, as time has gone on race prejudices, so graphically described by the Senator from South Carolina, have developed in the North about as rapidly as they have in the South, the only difference being in the intensity of the preju-Where is there a Northern State now that contains a colored member of the legislature? Where is there a Northern State in which a negro is elected to an office of responsibility? In which Northern State does the appointing power select negroes of education and moral worth and ability to fill posi-

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure. Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator probably has overlooked the fact that not long ago a negro of education and worth was appointed to a judicial position in Massachusetts, and is filling it

Mr. PATTERSON. I am glad to hear from the Senator from New Hampshire of an exception. But even that exception is not in his own State. What has the Senator got to say about his own State?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President-

Mr. PATTERSON. It may have been done in Massachusetts, and here and there may be isolated exceptions. I am stating the all but universal rule, and if the Senator from New Hampshire can state an exception, it will but enforce the rule I have

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, he called for a case and I gave him a case. I thought the Senator would be glad to know that fact, because he wanted to be accurate. As far as New Hampshire is concerned, we have very few colored men in our State, and I do not recall an instance where one has even ever asked to be elected or appointed to an office.

Mr. PATTERSON. It may be, Mr. President, that the negroes of New Hampshire are more modest and less ambitious than the negroes of other States, but I have no doubt but that in his State there are educated negroes and able negroes and honest negroes, who, so far as the work of high executive offices is concerned, would be able to do it with satisfaction to the Commonwealth; and many of these negroes would be glad to fill these offices, but the race feeling that I have no doubt exists in New Hampshire, as elsewhere, prevents them from doing so.

We find in the North, Mr. President, that in nearly every detail of business matters the negro is deprived of every position of responsibility. They are not even permitted to drive street cars or to collect the fares. In many of the Northern States the negro is not even permitted to be a member of a The services that he performs are now menial in character or almost wholly personal. Under these conditions it may not seem in good form for men of the North to decry to any very great extent the attitude of such as the Senator from South Carolina. But, Mr. President, that does not meet the proposition. There are 10,000,000, or thereabouts, of negroes in the United States to-day. By a constitutional amendment, adopted at the close of the war, those negroes had conferred upon them-it might be said, had forced upon them—the rights of citizenship. The States were prohibited from depriving them of the right to vote by reason of their color or former condition. Under the four-teenth amendment the blacks had conferred upon them the right to vote, with only such exceptions or limitations as applied to white men. This legislation has led to an intensity of feeling against the black man in a number of the Southern States and accounts in a measure for the attitude of the Senator from South Carolina upon the race question. The Senator insists that there is but one remedy for the evils he claims the fourteenth amendment has inflicted upon the South, which is the repeal of that amendment and the deprivation of the black man of the right to vote. The appeals the Senator has made is against not only social equality, but also against political equality between the whites and the blacks.

If the Senator from South Carolina was the only distinguished southern man who has entered upon a crusade to secure this result, perhaps I might not notice it, for the Senator is in many respects sul generis, and is quite willing to admit that such is the case; but Governor Vardaman, of Mississippi, and Hoke Smith, of Georgia, soon to be governor of Georgia, if not already the chief executive of that State, have made the same declarations, and there is rapidly being organized in the South a movement to demand that the North unite with the South in the repeal of the fourteenth amendment and the practical return of the negroes of the country to a condition of peonage. the attitude of the men and women of the North-

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.
Mr. TILLMAN. Has the Senator from Colorado ever visited the black belt of Alabama or South Carolina or Mississippi?

Mr. PATTERSON. I never have.
Mr. TILLMAN. Well, then, would not the Senator be apt to learn something if he would go down there and study this question at close quarters, rather than theorizing about it up in Colorado, where they have only about 2,000 negroes all told?

Mr. PATTERSON. I have no question but it would be better to have visited that section.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not undertake to advise the Senator; but before he commits himself too far to the doctrine of absolute equality of man, the inevitable result, he had better study the question a little.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, forty-odd years have apsed since the close of the civil war. The question of the negro elapsed since the close of the civil war.

has been one that has entered into the social, political, and public life of the American people, and the man who has not investigated, so that he may think and talk intelligently about it without visiting the black belt, has lived to little purpose and has poorly observed the duties that devolve upon him as a citizen. I am well aware that in the belt of States commencing at Texas and ending with North Carolina the white and the negro populations are almost equal, the population in that tier of States amounting to somewhere in the neighborhood of 6,000,000 whites and 6,000,000 blacks.

Mr. TILLMAN. About four million.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; considerably larger than that. I am also aware that in some of the States-one or two of themthe black population will double the white population, and I am not entirely lost to a proper conception of the terrible problem that has been devolved upon the people of the South growing out of the war and the granting of the ballot to the negroes of

But, Mr. President, the blacks and the whites must live to-It is idle to talk of the separation of the races. They can not be winnowed out and set apart in different sections of the country, nor can the negro be deported to any other country. The Senator from South Carolina would be the first and most vehement against any proposition to take the negroes from the South or from the State of South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.
Mr. TILLMAN. I would be a very strong opponent of that doctrine, because it would be the most cruel of all the remedies that have ever been suggested or proposed by anybody at any time or anywhere. That is all. I would to God none of them I would not undertake to send them away by expatriation or colonization, because it would simply mean their destruction; and I do not want to destroy them.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will not impugn the morality of the motives that would induce the Senator from South Carolina to oppose the deportation of negroes from his State; but I am inclined to believe that there is an additional reason, and a stronger one, a reason that is more controlling than a mere sentiment of humanity—that reason is self-preservation; for the labor of the negro is absolutely necessary to the prosperity of the Senator's State and to that of every other Southern State.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly, I do not object, Mr. President. Mr. TILLMAN. I am sorry the Senator can not give me the credit for a disinterested and honest statement, but would impugn the integrity of my utterance and charge directly or indirectly that selfishness would govern me in objecting to that. Has the Senator ever read the record as set forth in Buckle's History of Civilization in England of the deportation of the million and a half of Moors after their conquest of Granada by Ferdinand and Isabella? If he has not, I advise him to get that book and read the horrors which would result from the deportation element alone, to say nothing of the indirect trouble and the loss to the country from which deportation occurs, to convince him that the cruelty of the thing is alone, so far as I am concerned, the reason why I should object.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I have read Buckle, not once, but three times, and I am quite familiar with the recital to which the Senator refers.

But in this connection let me say, Mr. President, that I did not intend to in any wise reflect upon the Senator's own statement of the motives that would influence him to place obstacles in the way of the migration of southern negroes from South Carolina, but I do say that, in addition to the reason he states, the motive of self-preservation would be equally controlling— South Carolina could not afford to lose the negro, for the negro must be there to do the labor of that State.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from South Carolina is fully aware of the great loss in a financial way, the destruction of values, the derangement of labor, and the financial panic that would come, not only to South Carolina, but to the United States and to Christendom, if the negroes were colonized away from the South; but I want the Senator to understand that the question of colonization would, of course, excite opposition in South Carolina, because we have some selfish and greedy men down there who want to hold on to the negroes as laborers, as worthless as they are becoming, and we have got lots of them; but I hope the Senator will not put me in that lot.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will not follow that phase of the subject, Mr. President, any further. I will allow my statement and the statement of the Senator from South Carolina to stand, confident that there is no substantial conflict or dispute beween us. I have no doubt but that the heart of the Senator from South Carolina would go out to the negroes in the suffering they would necessarily be compelled to endure if they were forcibly taken from the country that is their home; nor have I any doubt either, Mr. President, that the Senator from South Carolina, even if the matter of the suffering of the negro was not involved, would stand like a wall of adamant against any movement to take from the State of South Carolina the labor upon which its prosperity depends.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly. Mr. TILLMAN. We are simply discussing an academic proposition with no possibility of it ever being tested; therefore my statement of my opinion and my wishes and the Senator's interpretation of them, as he puts an interpretation upon them, is of no practical use. But I do not hesitate to tell the Senator that under the conditions which exist in South Carolina to-day, with a negro majority of 225,000 in the State, those conditions in the near future will be appalling, and that unless something is done to undo the mistakes of the past, unless there is some method of easement, some scheme by which those people can be distributed somewhere, the struggle between the races is inevitable; and when the two races get at each other's throats those who stand up and theorize about it in Colorado will not be the ones to participate in the throat cutting or in having their throats cut, as we will.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, if it were a certainty that this conflict will come, and must come soon, granting that if it should come I would not be there to be a party to it, it does not make it any less the duty of those of us who live in the North and are of the same political affiliations as the Senator from South Carolina to meet the question, and discuss it in advance, and even to take issue with the Senator from South Carolina upon the methods that should be adopted to avert the dire calamities that he predicts.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. PATTERSON. Now, Mr. President, I submit that when the remarks of the Senator from South Carolina and mine appear in the Record, unless some stop is put to the interruptions by the Senator, more space will be taken up with his remarks than with mine.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon and will not interrupt him again. He mentioned the Senator from South Carolina in nearly every other sentence and in some respects has misunderstood him and in others appears to go on to misrep-Therefore, the Senator from South Carolina was sent him. compelled-

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, if the Senator from South Carolina is of the opinion either that I have misunderstood him or misrepresented him I will cheerfully give him opportunity for interruption for the purpose of correction.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is all I have been trying to do—to make myself understood. The Senator appears to think or to fear that he alone is responsible for the Democratic party, and that there are only two Senators, or will only be two Senators who are Democrats in this Chamber after the 4th of March, and that two years from now, if the Senator from South Carolina should make a few more speeches, there would be none. If there should never be another Democrat elected to the Senate from South Carolina the people of the South will stand by white supremacy, and be Democrats in consequence. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will call attention to the rules of the Senate, which forbid applause in the galleries.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, no one doubts the truth of what the Senator says as to his own attitude, but I think I may, with propriety, suggest that nothing that I have said or suggested leaves me open to the imputation of claiming that I am the only Democrat and that when this or the next term expires they will all be out of the Senate. But I have a right, Mr. President, to speak in behalf of the several million of men who do not live in the South and who belong to the same political party with both of us, to express their views, if I can, upon this great issue, and not allow it to go abroad by the silence of Democratic Senators that every Democratic Senator stands with the Senator from South Carolina for the disfranchisement of the negro; and, as I suggested a little while ago, for practically returning him to a state of peonage.

Mr. President, in the early days after the rebellion there were terrible times in the Southern States, and the Senator from South Carolina has enlightened the country, through his office of Senator, as to the part he was willing to play in the acts that he approved. There were White Caps and Ku Klux, and there were tissue ballots; there were other methods for suppressing the vote of the negro in the South. I need not say, Mr. President, that, in my opinion, millions of the best people in the South reprobated that method of securing the supremacy of the whites and procured its abandonment and undertook to accomplish the same thing through the agency of the law.

Southern States, one after the other, called constitutional conventions, and for the purpose of eliminating a great proportion of the negro vote have incorporated voting qualifications in their constitutions that, in my opinion, were at the time, and will continue to be for many years, quite ample to leave the whites of the South in unqualified political control. And I want to say, Mr. President, that so long as the southern people contented themselves with maintaining political supremacy through the agency of constitutional and statutory provisions—enactments that bore equally upon the blacks and the whites-the people of the North were content to allow the South to work out this problem for itself.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say a word?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir; with pleasure. Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has alluded to some of my own utterances in this Chamber. I have nothing to say by way of apology for anything that I have ever said here, but I want to remind the Senator of one fact, that we had in South Carolina in 1870 35,000 more negro voters than we had white men; and we could no more have beaten them lawfully and legally under the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution. which have been thrust down our throats at the point of the bayonet, than we could have flown. We would never have had the opportunity to make amendments to our constitution, which would give control to the whites legally, if we had not taken it The Senator would have us to lift away from the negroes. ourselves over the fence by our boot straps. We were not able to do it; and so we got over in any way we could.

Mr. SPOONER. But you got over?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; we got over it for the time being.

Mr. PATTERSON. I contented myself with referring to the fact that the Senator upon several occasions, here and elsewhere, had in a boastful spirit told of lawless intimidation to overcome the blacks. I said I did not believe they were approved by the best people of the South. I merely referred to a historical fact that I might, in logical order, reach the point where the people of the South undertook by lawful methods, by constitutional provisions supplemented by statutory enactments, to give the whites supremacy in the South. Those enactments limit the voting franchise by educational and property qualifications and also by what the Senator, in a recent speech in Maryland, referred to as the "understanding" clause of the constitutions. When we recall the degree of ignorance that prevails among the blacks in the South, their lack of education, the intense poverty of most of them, we can well understand that with these new enactments providing educational, property-holding, and "understanding" qualifications, it must be for many and many and many a year that the whites of South Carolina will be in unquestioned and unchallenged control of their State.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.
Mr. TILLMAN. The suffrage clause of South Carolina adopted in 1895 provides that no man shall vote unless he can read and write a clause of the constitution, or its alternative, or pays taxes on $300-that and nothing more. We did have the understanding clause for the purpose of enabling us to register our illiterate whites, believing that it was our duty to take care of our own race and color and kin. Under that registration we registered the whites and then quit; and we have nothing now but a simple educational and property qualification.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is the Senator through?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am simply showing the Senator the situation. I will say to him, in addition, though, that this same constitution provided for an increase of the free school tax from 2 mills to 3, and we have had any time in these thirty years more negro children going to school and learning to read and write, and therefore qualifying themselves to vote, than we have had whites, because there are more of them. How long will it be before enough of them are able to read and write and vote to stand up and say to us, "We will have none of you; we will take the State." That is what I am trying to get the country and the Senate to understand. I will be a dead man when the struggle for the mastery comes; but I am giving you warning here, as it is my duty to do, that blood will flow like water in South Carolina before the negroes will ever be allowed to take possession of the State again.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I attempted to show that the people of South Carolina—and I did so without heat or prejudice, for I assure the Senator my feelings are largely in sympathy with his upon the subject of negro supremacy in his or in any other State-but, Mr. President, when the best thought of the South, for the purpose of removing the odium associated with flagrant violations of the law, with personal violence of a desperate and degrading character upon the colored part of the population, caused their people to meet in constitutional conventions, and to adopt constitutional amendments that put every southern State under the complete control of the whites for many generations to come, it occurred to me that such great and distinguished leaders as the Senator from South Carolina, and the governors of Georgia and Mississippi, should engage their talents and influence in assuaging the animosities that grow out of race feeling and endeavor by other methods than such as arouse prejudice, to not only bring, but to maintain, peace between the two races in this country.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Colorado, except he has signified a willingness to be corrected when he made a mistake, and I give him credit for feeling what he says. I desire to state that when he says the governor of Mississippi is prepared and desires to do by violence anything to effect any purpose whatever, he has made a misstatement of the fact.

Mr. PATTERSON. If anything that I have said is open to that imputation

Mr. MONEY. I am only using the Senator's language, as the notes of the stenographer will, I think, show.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think, Mr. President, that when the stenographer extends his notes it will not be found that I suggested that either the Senator from South Carolina or the governor of the State from which the Senator comes undertake to accomplish or would advise at this time the use of violence for the purpose of maintaining the supremacy of the whites in his State. Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, if I misunderstood the Senator, of course I will be glad to withdraw the language I have used; but, if he will pardon me, I should like to have the stenographer read the Senator's language to see if I so grossly misunderstood him

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, surely I did not intend to cast any imputation of that kind upon the governor of the State of Mississippi. If I did, it was by the inadvertent coupling of his name with that of the Senator from South Carolina.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi made a request that the Reporter read the remarks of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MONEY. I do not want to embarrass the Senator now in his speech, and I will withdraw that request, upon the assurance the Senator has just given.

Mr. PATTERSON. Because nothing that the governor of Mississippi has said justifies me or anybody else, so far as I know, in stating that he would advocate the use of violence for any purpose whatsoever.

Mr. President, what I want to make clear is this: That while the people of the country approve, at least by their silence, the efforts of the people of the South to secure and maintain white supremacy in the different States through the agency of the law, they deprecate open boastful statements by distinguished men of the South that the law is a farce; that the law is only intended for one class of people, and does not operate upon the other; that the law is simply a fraud upon the people of the nation and is used in the spirit that marked the treatment of the negroes before the constitutional amendments were adopted, according to the avowals of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Colorado name the distinguished men from the South who have insisted that the law is a farce; that the law is a fraud; that the law ought not to be enforced, and that lynch law is proper? I would be glad to have the Senator name the distinguished gentlemen from the South who have insisted that any such course ought to be pur-

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I did not say that any dis-tinguished man from the South had stated that lynch law was proper; but I will name the Senator, I will name the distinguished man from the South who travels all over the North lecturing at Chautauquas and in great cities, who, coming from the South, received as a representative of the South, does openly proclaim in nearly every speech he makes that the constitutional provisions as put into the constitutions of several Southern States were intended to operate only upon the negroes, and did not operate upon the whites, while in terms they were to operate

I clipped from the Baltimore American of a few days ago, from the issue of January 5, the report of a lecture delivered by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina in the State of Maryland; and whatever the distinguished Senator would say in Maryland he would say in New York, or in Illinois, or in

Mr. TILLMAN. Or here. [Laughter.] Mr. PATTERSON. And if the Senator from South Carolina has been misquoted, certainly he will not hesitate to make note of the fact as I read. I quote from the Baltimore American, which has at the head of the address a magnificent picture of the Senator, of which he ought to be proud. I quote the following from that speech:

The amended Constitution has declared that the negro shall have the same rights as enjoyed by a white man. The Supreme Court of the United States has declared the State has the right to regulate its suffrage privilege. The fourteenth amendment gives the negro the right to vote. The fifteenth amendment declared that no State shall pass a law discriminating against the negro. We can pass laws depriving foreigners of the right to vote, but we can not pass laws applying to the negroes. We are, therefore, bound and shackled by this law. We looked for relief. We decided that no man should vote unless he can read or write or pay taxes on property valued at $300.

Mr. TILLMAN. "Read and write."

Mr. PATTERSON. The article says "read or write" but the

Mr. PATTERSON. The article says "read or write," but the Senator states that it should be "read and write."

We decided that no man should vote unless he can read-And taking the correction of the Senator-and write or pay taxes on property valued at $300. We had the problem of saving votes of some of our white citizens who could not read nor write or who did not own property worth $300. I would have my hand burned off before I would agree to the disfranchisement of a single whife man unless he committed some crime. I urged our people to hold a constitutional convention. I was called a demagogue. Well, I tell the truth as I see it.

We introduced the understanding clause, which we found we borrowed from Mississippi. It is the most charming piece of mechanism ever invented. Well, the officers of registration were white men. We do not want any more negro officers in South Carolina. We had enough of them once to last us ten thousand years.

I never served as a registration judge, but I suspect I know how the judges acted. I know if I had been a registration officer I would have acted as I shrewdly suspect that the judges did act. The white man would apply for registration. "Can you read?" the judge would ask. "No." "Can you write?" "No." "Do you own property worth $300?" "No." The judge would then read a single clause of the Constitution. The white man could understand it. When the negro applied and could not explain the clause. "Very sorry," said the judge; "we can not register you." "Good-bye, boss."

The negre quit voting in South Carolina in 1882. He found that it was not healthy to go to the polls.

Does that meet the request of the Senator from Georgia? What room is there to misunderstand the meaning of the Senator who delivered that address?

Mr. TILLMAN. I fail to see any advocacy of murder or

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no. I did not say that you advocated murder or force. What I undertook to show was that a distinguished Senator was boasting that the franchise constitutional amendments were used as frauds, to operate only against black men, when they were intended to operate upon white and black alike, and that thereby fraud was committed upon the country and the colored voter.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator think fraud was committed upon the country when every man who could read understood just exactly what was meant and why that elastic provision was

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, I don't know about that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then why say a fraud was committed when the Republican Supreme Court has sustained that clause of the Mississippi constitution as being in accord with the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I take issue with the Senator from South Carolina. I am glad to say that but few of the representative men from the South assert that those amendments were adopted merely to pretend that which they stated. I do not believe there is another Senator upon the floor who will rise in his place and admit or assert that the constitutional amendments of his State are openly administered for the purpose of allowing white men, who come within their prohibition, to vote and to prevent every colored man from

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will allow me now—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. The grandfather clause which has been adopted by three or four States, if I recall the words, provides that no man shall vote in a certain State unless he can read and write or is the descendant lineally of a man who could vote in 1800 over the could be compared to the could be contained to the contain 1860. Everybody knows that nobody could vote in 1860 except white people. If that is not a plain evasion of the proposition that there shall be no discrimination on account of race or color. what is it?

So far as concerns my being a representative man of the South, I do not care a straw whether anybody anywhere acknowledges it. So long as I represent the eighty-odd thousand men in South Carolina who at the last primary voted for me and I had no opposition and the legislature next Tuesday will elect me to represent the people of that State—I do not care whether the people of Colorado like it or not.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. MONEY. I take advantage too often, I am afraid, of the courtesy of the Senator from Colorado. I wish to say that the statement which he read from the lecture of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] does not correctly state the position of things in Mississippi. For instance, in that State there is no writing clause nor any property clause. It is only required that the man who desires to register can read a degree of the that the man who desires to register can read a clause of the Constitution, and not explain it, but can understand it when it is That is all. If the man reads at all, whether he is read to him. black or white (and I want to say that nearly every black man in the State can read) then he can vote. But if he can not read, it is intended as a softening of the hardness of that provision by saying if he can understand.

I wish to say, if the Senator will permit me, in order that this matter may be put straight before the country, that I have inquired all over the State and I have never found one instance where any man, black or white, was refused registration because he could not understand a clause of the Constitution. The reason why that clause was put in is this: Senator George, who is now dead, lately a distinguished member of this body, was the constructive statesman of that constitution. He was opposed to educational, property, and other clauses of that sort. It was passed over his head, and he introduced the understanding clause as a mitigating fact.

If the Senator will permit me further, I will say that in Mississippi there is no grandfather clause, and the only thing of any value is the poll tax for two years, which is required, and that is what keeps the great body of the negro voters from the polls. Now, it is not my fault or anybody's else fault that the negro does not pay the tax. I want to say if a white man does not pay his tax he does not vote, either.

I am indebted to the Senator for this opportunity to put my State right on the record, as it has been a little misrepresented.

Mr. PATTERSON. I trust the Senator from Mississippi does not for a moment suppose that I am criticising any man in his State, nor was I in any manner impugning the provisions of the constitution of the State of Mississippi, nor do I in any manner impugn the righteousness or the justice of the provisions in the constitution of the State of South Carolina. What I do object to, Mr. President, is any leading man of the South on this floor and throughout the States of the North proclaiming for the South that for the purpose of disfranchising the negro they and their election judges are lawless, and that the law is administered for the purpose of unjustly and illegally depriving men of one color of the vote to which they are entitled while it does not operate the same way upon men of the white race, although they admit it was intended to operate alike upon

I have attempted to say—and if I have not said it I wish to say it now—I do not believe that even a small proportion of the people of the South are in sympathy with proceedings of this character. I believe, as was stated by the Senator from Mississippi, that having provided these safeguards in the constitution, the men of the South seek, as a rule, to administer the constitution and the law in their true spirit and not for the purpose of defrauding one element in the community and favoring other elements in the community that have, under the letter of the constitutions of the States, the same identical voting privileges.

What I mainly object to is this, and I speak in behalf of millions of Democrats in the North: I do not wish their views to be misinterpreted. They have no more respect for the lawbreaker in dealing with elections than they have for the lawbreaker in dealing with the property of his neighbor. They were perfectly content, realizing the problem that had devolved upon the people of the South, that they should protect themselves by constitutions and laws which on their face were fair and just and applied to all alike. They want to feel and believe that those laws are administered in the spirit in which they understood they were enacted. When men from the South visit Chicago and other northern cities and announce the things that I have objected to, the impression is created that the men of the South are a law-violating and a law-defying population, and that the negroes of the South have no rights that the white men regard themselves under any obligations to respect.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that instead of offending my colleagues here and using the words "men of the South," whenever he refers to something I have said or done anywhere, he just simply say, "Whenever the Sen-ator from South Carolina goes to Chicago and other northern cities and says so and so." The Senator from South Carolina is responsible to himself and his constituents, and not to anybody else; and what if the people of the North listen to me and applaud me and show by their actions that they agree with me? I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado that I will debate with him in Colorado at any time, if he wants to, the question of the equality of man and the equality of the negro with the white

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from South Carolina can get up no discussion with me upon the equality of man, and I have only referred to men of the South, and distinguished men of the South, to enforce the proposition that when certain distinguished men from the South visit the North and make statements of this kind the entire South must bear the odium and the burden, and we of the North who are fighting Democratic battles are met with the statements that such are the sentiments of the people of the South, and we do not and can not agree with them.

I have no question that the Senator can gather and does gather thousands to hear him and thousands who will applaud him, but I state it as my profound conviction that when they applaud expressions approving of lawlessness, rejoicing in the use of force for whatever unlawful purpose, they are not the best elements of the North and they do not represent the mass of the party in the North to which he and I belong. [Applause in the galleries.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly. Mr. TILLMAN. I can not, of course, undertake to pass upon the character of the northern audiences, except to say that, so far as I have been able to judge, they are people of intelligence, people of refinement and education, and in every way as good as the country up there has got. I may be mistaken, but I will call attention to the fact that Chautauquas and lyceum lectures are not supported by either ignorant people or poor people. And so far as my own party in the North is concerned, it has such shining examples of demoralization, of ward politicians, of dirty, low creatures who have not enough character or anything else to get any votes unless they buy them, that I do not care if we never have any of that type to back us up in the South. have no use for them. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair again admonishes the occupants of the galleries that under the rules of the Senate manifestations of approval or disapproval are prohibited. Chair trusts that it will not be necessary to repeat this ad-

Mr. PATTERSON. I will not reply in any wise to the last utterance of the Senator from South Carolina.

I want to refer now that I am on my feet to the matter of criminal assaults in the South, upon the horror of which is based the violent attitude of those who are in sympathy with the Senator from South Carolina. Nobody can utter more heartfelt and more violent execrations than I would if I had the power of language which others possess. But the most decisive condemnation of the crime, the most overwhelming abhorrence of it that can be spoken, I indorse with all my heart.

But I call attention to the fact that this awful crime is not as all-pervading and as universal with the blacks as the constant repetition and denunciation of the crime and the mob punishment that follows would seem to imply.

I have in my hand a tabulation of all the lynchings of the country during the year 1906. The tabulation was made in New Orleans, I suppose, as it bears the date line of that city, and it was sent to the country as the mathematical truth.

There were in the entire country in 1906 seventy-three lynchings. Of these but thirty-four were for criminal assaults and attempted criminal assaults. Of the seventy-three there were but thirteen actual assaults.

Mr. President, when you recall that there are about 10,000,000 negroes in the country and that about 90 per cent of those are in the States of the South, justice demands that so small a number, relatively, shall not be sufficient upon which to indict the entire black race for the crime and to use it as a logical argument in support of the proposition that the 10,000,000 black population shall be deprived of all political rights and be practically returned to the condition in which they were before the war, all on account of the misdeeds of but thirty-four of their

I commend what was said by the President in his last regular message upon the subject of lynching. It is justly and fearlessly spoken and bears no more harshly upon the one section than upon the other in connection with the crime. It is a homily upon the duties of citizenship in dealing with rape and every other character of crime that should be read and heeded by all.

The question is asked, How are these offenses to be prevented? I believe that if the real conservative and intelligent spirit of the South should prevail, if that which is taught by the great majority of its statesmen, by the presidents and professors in its institutions of learning, by the ministers from their pulpits, was observed, this crime would gradually and certainly die out. At least it would be committed by the blacks as rarely in the South as it is in the North, and it is hardly ever heard of in the Northern States.

Mr. President, if when the offense is perpetrated and the criminal arrested he were subjected to trial under the law in the community in which the offense was committed, and the law against the offense was enforced, as it would be, certainly and inexorably, I believe that such a regard by the whites for the majesty of the law would have a most salutary and gratifying effect upon the colored population. It would lead and encourage them to respect the law and to strive the harder to put a bridle upon their passions. I have no doubt, Mr. President, but that violence and lawlessness on the part of the dominant population of a community beget lawlessness and violence and the commission of just such crimes by those against whom lawless violence was instituted to suppress them.

Will the Senator from Colorado allow me? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi? Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. There have been instances of criminal assaults by negroes in the State of Colorado, and the guilty men were burned at the stake by the mob.

Mr. TILLMAN. The same in Kansas and Delaware.

Mr. MONEY. I am speaking now of only one State, the one represented by my distinguished friend the Senator from Colo-

If he will permit me-and I interrupt him with great reluctance—I will state that the author of that message which the Senator has just read has unfortunately written a book, and in that book he states—it was written a long time ago, some ten or fifteen years, I believe it was-that horse thieving was so prevalent in Idaho-horses being the only property citizens had, the land all belonging to the United States-that it had to be stopped; that the law was insufficient, and the mob hanged fifty-nine men. The author said of course they sometimes got the wrong man, which seemed to be inevitable under the circum-He applauded the proceeding, and said the result was good; that it drove the horse thieves from the State.

I do not care to use that except in answer to the message itself. They are both in print and both on record.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.
Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator from Mississippi inadvertently used the name of the State of Idaho when he intended to refer to some other State.

Mr. MONEY. As the Senator from Idaho is alive, I, perhaps, [Laughter.] was mistaken.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suppose the Senator did not intend to refer to the State of Idaho-

Mr. MONEY. Of course that is all pleasantry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will suspend until the Senate is in order.

Mr. MONEY. I beg pardon. The Senator from Idaho is always courteous. Of course that was jocular between the Senator and me.

I may be mistaken about Idaho. It may be Wyoming, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is not present.

Mr. WARREN rose.
Mr. MONEY. It was one or the other State. You will find it in the book called "Ranching in the West" or "Roughing it in the West.'

Mr. HEYBURN and Mr. WARREN addressed the Chair. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not want this to turn into an experience meeting.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely want the record corrected, unless it was an inadvertence on the part of the Senator, because I think the facts that he was stating did not relate to the State

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly. Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, Wyoming does not deserve the stigma my friend put upon it.

Mr. MONEY. I was not putting any stigma at all. I was only quoting the language of the book.

Mr. WARREN. In the thirty-nine years I have lived in what is now Wyoming—for when I took my residence there it was not Wyoming, but a part of Dakota and of other States and Territories-I have never known of an instance of that kind. know we are slightly out of fashion in that regard. If it will add anything to the gayety of the occasion, I will apologize

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I deem it my duty to say in this connection that never during the quarter of a century that I have lived in Idaho has there been a lynching within the State for any

Mr. PATTERSON. Now that Idaho is purged, I propose to go on. I would name the Territory, now a State, to which the President referred in his book were it not that I know we would have two more Senators rising either to protest or explain the

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will give us-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN.. For the benefit of those of us who have not such good memories

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has not yielded.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from South Carolina, I think, is through now

Mr. TILLMAN. I only wish to ask a question of the Senator. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. For a question.
Mr. TILLMAN. What State is it that the President all-ded to in that book?

Mr. PATTERSON. It was not Colorado. The State was not a State at the time of the occurrences. It was in that great intermountain section of the country where society was not organized, where the population was exceedingly sparse, and where, as in every new country before the machinery of the law has been put in full operation, the people themselves have had to act for self-protection.

But I am inclined to think, Mr. President, that occurrences of that kind in a new country, in an almost virgin country, could not be used to parallel like occurrences in the very oldest States of the Union, in the original colonies that rebelled against Great Britain and, with other colonies, fought and won the war of the Revolution; States in which as colonies and States law and order have been firmly enthroned for more than two centuries and in which society has reached the highest state of perfection that is attainable in our country; States in which I believe the best thought is against violence of every character and that would be quite willing, aye, States that would rejoice, Mr. President, in having every quality of criminality punished under the terms of the law and by those appointed to admin-

It is true, Mr. President, as was stated by the Senator from Mississippi, that seven or eight years ago a negro committed an offense of this character in Colorado. It was away in the eastern portion of the State, upon the broad unpopulated plains, between the settled parts of Kansas and the settled parts of Colorado; in a section of the State where homes are few and distances between them are great; where many miles measure these distances and the population, whatever it is, live an isolated and lonely existence.

But I want to say, Mr. President, that the press of the State and the churches of the State and the public men of the State almost without exception denounced the deed. I am compelled to say with regret that within the past sixty days another lynching occurred, but it was in nearly the same section. It was a white man that was lynched for the killing of a white official, and in all human probability there would have been another lynching for a like offense shortly thereafter had it not been that the gravest doubt existed as to the identity of the man arrested for the crime.

But, however many cases may be cited it does not justify the substitution of the lawlessness of a mob for the due and orderly administration of the law in conducting government. Especially is this true when, as I am convinced it is, if instead of mob law the due and orderly administration of the law was substituted the number of offenses that provoked the mobs would be greatly lessened and only those who committed the offenses would be punished for them.

It is also true, Mr. President, that mob violence exercised for one crime weakens the bonds of the law when other crimes are committed. It leads to the infliction of death for offenses that are trivial and that would be punished by no more than a fine if the law itself was allowed to have its course. Let me read from the article giving the statistics of mobs for 1906, to which I have heretofore referred. It sets forth the different crimes for which the 73 lynchings were inflicted:

Following were the crimes charged against the 73 victims of mob wrath: Triple criminal assault, 1; criminal assault, 13; attempted criminal assault, 19; assault and murder, 1; murder, 15; attempted murder, 11; murder and robbery, 1; dual murder, 1; quadruple murder, 3; quintuple murder, 1; miscegenation, improper proposals, robbery, carrying pistol—

theft of calf, theft of $1, disorderly conduct, one each. The disorderly-conduct case was an outgrowth of the Atlanta riots. The pistol-carrying incident and that of the theft of $1 and the theft of a calf provoked wide indignation.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator give the name of the authority he is quoting? What is it?

Mr. PATTERSON. It is, I think, an Associated Press dispatch. Its date line is New Orleans, and it purports to give all the lynchings in the United States and the causes that led up to them in the year 1906.

Mr. TILLMAN. Who compiled it?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know. If it comes from the Associated Press agent at New Orleans, in all probability he is a member of the staff of one of the New Orleans papers.

But, lest there might be some error, let me state that they give in this compilation the number of lynchings charged to each State. Let me see whether or not they have stated that correctly. We have two Senators here from each State and correctly. they must know whether the number against their State is correct. Alabama has five.
Mr. TILLMAN. In what time?

Mr. PATTERSON. In the year 1906. Arkansas, four. Colorado, one, the one to which I just referred. Florida, six; Georgia, nine; Indian Territory, one; Kentucky, three; Louisiana, nine; Mississippi, five; Maryland, one; Missouri, three; North Carolina, five; South Carolina, five; Tennessee, two; Texas, six. Of these lynchings the following were the numbers in each State for criminal assaults and attempts to commit such assaults: Alabama, four; Arkansas, three; Florida, one; Georgia, four; Indian Territory, one; Kentucky, two; Louisiana, four; Mississippi, five; Maryland, one; Missouri, three; South Carolina, Territory, one; Kentucky, two; Louisiana, four;

lina, two; Tennessee, one; Texas, three.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am not prepared—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina? Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not prepared to verify the accuracy of that statement, but I will say to the Senator that as long as the negroes continue to ravish white women we will continue to

Mr. PATTERSON. If I had supposed that I would have provoked another such utterance as that from the Senator, I would have omitted the State of South Carolina from my summary.

Mr. President, what I appeal for is this (and I do it in behalf of the people of the South as well as in behalf of the people of the North), that it shall not stand unchallenged that the aim of the people and the statesmen of the South is to disfranchise the negro; that the aim is to repeal the fourteenth amendment; that their purpose is to return 10,000,000 negroes to practical bondage, to range them side by side with the horse and the cow upon the plantation, to treat them with kindness if they merit it, to pat them as you pat a swift and kindly horse, to give them food as you would feed your animals, and deprive them of all political rights under the Constitution of our country, in this the greatest and most righteous republic of which the world has

I give it as my opinion that unless this sort of talk by leading southern statesmen is stopped, although it is not in harmony with the best thought of the South, the restoration of Democratic supremacy in any State of the North is unlikely.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator permit me again to interrupt

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir. Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Colorado has allowed his imagination to be somewhat inflamed by these newspaper figures. I want to ask him what he thinks about the law-abiding people of the South as compared with the law-abiding people of Colorado, and if he believes that there has ever been in the South a state of such revolutionary riot, disorder, violence, and disregard of law as existed in his own State under a dictatorship and a military there when hundreds of people were exported, without any trial, beyond the limits of the State, and nobody was safe and assassination was riot? Has there ever been in the South an exhibition of inefficiency of government and the triumph of a nonlaw-abiding spirit such as there was in Colorado? I am speaking about the year 1904, I think, or 1905 probably, and I want to say that I got it all from the Senator's paper. [Laughter.]
Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I have not hesitated to speak my sentiments about the things the Senator refers to and my abhorrence of them upon every proper occasion. But I will not digress from the topic in hand for the purpose of taking up that subject now. If I did, it might create the impression that I was arraigning the people of the Southern States along the lines that the Senator from Mississippi has suggested.

I have spoken, Mr. President, to little effect if the Senator from Mississippi believes that I have assailed the people of the South. On the contrary, I have attempted to maintain, in my own weak and imperfect way, that the men who indict the people of the South are few in number, and though distinguished they come from the South itself, and they are not Senators or men or newspapers from the North; for in the North they believe with me that the great mass of southern people, the best thought of the South, the intelligence and the Christianity of the South, revolt at the deeds I have been discussing, and if they could dominate the lawless spirit that breaks loose under provocation of such assaults in their States these violations of the law would cease.

Mr. MONEY. Now, I will ask the Senator to allow me a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I am trespassing upon the Senator's courtesy because I know he does not want the actual condition of things to be misrepresented. He has shown what he calls the "law-lessness of the South," not one or two men, but all the South, and my State is one of those that has been arraigned not only as a State, but in the person of its governor. I want to say now, and it will not be contradicted by anybody, that there is not a governor in the United States who has made a more manly, determined, and resolute effort and met with more success to put down the lynching and mob spirit than has the governor of Mississippi. It is true that in his speeches he has spoken without fear, arising from the personal and intellec-tual intrepidity that belongs to him naturally, what he thought about great public questions, but in the execution of the law there has been no more faithful administrator within all the sisterhood of States than the governor of the State of Mississippl. The records bear me out in the statement that he has risked his own person time and again; that he has prevented many lynchings and brought criminals to justice. other day he offered a reward for a white man who killed two negroes in a difficulty down there, which was begun by the assassination of one conductor and the cutting to pieces of another with a knife by a negro, and the killing of an officer who attempted to arrest the negro. Yet, as two negroes were murdered, the governor has offered a reward for the murderers of those negroes, as well as for the murderers of the white man. I want the Senator to absolve him at least as one of the men of the South who has done everything as governor that could be done by person and doctrine, too, in keeping down the mob spirit and in maintaining and supporting the courts of the country.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, what the Senator from Mississippi says as to Governor Vardaman is true. He has put up a manly front against the things I am decrying. The only thing that I said, or intended to say, about Governor Vardaman was that he is one of the few public men who have expressed themselves as demanding the repeal of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. To that extent I think the Senator from Mississippi will admit that I do not do him an injustice.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I was only replying to the charge of general violence through out the South and the record of lynching in my State, as well as others, going into his own State. The effect is as to all States, but the sermon is as to the South.

Mr. PATTERSON. I had attempted to show, Mr. President, not that lawlessness was extant over the South. I thought that I had succeeded in making the Senate feel that my views were different. What I attempted to express is that certain violent utterances in the North by some representative men of the South convey the impression to the North that they represent a public sentiment in the South that upholds mob lynchings to vindicate the law. This I know every Senator from the South, with few exceptions, does not approve of.

I repeat, Mr. President, what I have before suggested, that the best thought of the South is not in line with utterances that glory in the lynching of any man, whatever his crime, in an old-established and civilized society. It is not in line with the thought that would restore the negro practically to a state of bondage, but it is looking forward to the solving of these great problems along lines of reason and justice and common sense, recognizing that the white and the black must live together and that it is utterly impossible that the nation will consent to the disfranchisement of 10,000,000 of its people whom it enfranchised at the close of the civil war; and that it be-lieves that the men of the South should set themselves about solving this tremendous problem along lines totally different from those adopted by the men to whom I refer.

Mr. President, the man who presides over the University of Virginia, the great institution of learning that was founded by Thomas Jefferson, in touching upon this subject said:

The best southern people are too wise not to know that posterity will judge them according to the wisdom they use in this great concern. They are too just not to know that there is but one thing to do with a human being, and that is to give him a chance.

Professor Woodward, of Trinity College, of the State of South Carolina-

Mr. TILLMAN. North Carolina, I think.

Mr. PATTERSON. Of North Carolina, made this statement: What is to be done with the negro race? It must somehow be built into this national fabric, and organically incorporated with the national life and character.

Mr. OVERMAN. Who is that? Mr. PATTERSON. Professor Woodward, of Trinity College.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit me—
Mr. PATTERSON. I find these quotations in a late article written by Washington Gladden, and I do not believe he

Mr. TILLMAN. He is simply mistaken. I do not suppose he intended to say something not true, but there is no Trinity College in South Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—
Mr. PATTERSON. Is there a President Woodward in South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. No.

There is a Trinity College in North Caro-Mr. SIMMONS. lina, but I do not think there is any such professor there. I have never heard of any such man in North Carolina.

Mr. PATTERSON. There seems to be-

Mr. OVERMAN. I am a trustee of the college and I know of no such man there now, and I do not think there has been.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is there a President Kilgo in Trinity

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. PATTERSON. Very well, we have the man located in North Carolina, as president, I believe, of Trinity College. I suppose Kilgo would fairly represent the best thought of the South.

Mr. OVERMAN. He is a South Carolinian.

Mr. PATTERSON. He is a South Carolinian and the president of Trinity College, in North Carolina. Now, to demonstrate how North Carolina stands, let me read what President Kilgo

For a superior race to hold down an inferior one simply that the superior race may have the services of the inferior was the social doctrine of mediavalism. To deny the negro the strongest and the highest influences is to enslave him to a life of moral weakness and moral degradation. And the God who made him, in the final settlement of human history, will not likely overlook such unrighteous conduct.

Rev. Edgar Gardner Murphy, of Alabama, had something to say upon this question, and it was this:

While the development of the higher life (of the negro) may come slowly, even blunderingly, it is distinctly to be welcomed.

Mr. President, I heartily echo these sentiments of the distinguished scholars and educators of the South. I can not give a certain panacea for these troubles, but I think there is one panacea that is well worth trying. It is the enactment of just and righteous laws under the Constitution, the execution of those laws, and the discountenancing upon every provocation of mob law and lynchings because merely accused of crime. Continue as the South has begun, to educate the negro, make him safe in his property holdings, surround him with influences that will improve his moral character, and above all impress him with the justice and humanity of the dominant race. The negro has become a part of this national fabric; his place in it must be a logical one; it must be one in which he can maintain his selfrespect and enjoy the benefits and bear the burdens of a Government he helps to maintain. This does not embrace the idea of social equality at all. No one is so ignorant in this day and generation as to regard it as within the pale of possibility. The problem must be worked out along lines of law and righteousness. If that shall be done, the difficulties will vanish with the advance of time, and peace and hearty cooperation will take the place of strife and industrial chaos.

Mr. CULLOM and Mr. FORAKER addressed the Chair. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois. the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CULLOM. Not for a speech. I wish to move an executive session after giving a notice.

Mr. FORAKER. I rose, Mr. President, to ask that the resolution which has been under consideration may go over with the understanding and agreement that it shall be taken up at the close of the routine morning business on Monday.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose, first, of giving notice that on Monday morning, immediately after the morning business is over, I would ask the Senate to take up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and complete it before there is further discussion upon any other ques-

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President— Mr. CULLOM. I hope Senators will bear in mind that the appropriation bills must be considered as they come along. Otherwise we will reach the 4th of March without the neces sary appropriations having been made and an extra session will be forced upon us.

Mr. FORAKER. I make the request subject to the right of the appropriation bill, if the Senate is ready to proceed with it at that time. I understand it will not take a great while to dispose of it. Mr. CULLOM.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope not. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the pending resolution shall go over, to be taken up immediately after the routine morning business on Monday next, but not to interfere with the pending appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LOUIS A. BAIRD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5001) granting an increase of pension to Louis A. Baird; which was, in line 8, to strike out "thirty-six" and insert "thirty."

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

STATE OF MISSOURI, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, City of Jefferson.

Whereas the rapid increase in the manufacturing and agricultural output of the great valley of the Mississippi having during the last few years taxed our transportation facilities to their utmost capacity; and

Whereas our great and rapidly growing commerce will in the no distant future render our present transportation facilities absolutely inadequate to the necessities of that commerce:

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use all honorable means to secure the deepening of the channels of the Mississippi and its tributaries to the end that in the no distant future this great and productive valley may possess a navigable waterway from St. Anthony and the Great Lakes to the Gulf and from the Alleghenies to the Rocky Mountains open to all who wish to navigate it and free from private or corporate control.

Resolved further, That the chief clerk of the house is hereby instructed to supply each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress with a copy of this resolution.

Mr. STONE presented petitions of the Commercial Club of Cape Girardeau; of the Retail Merchants' Association of Jop-lin; of Zener & Reed, of Taberville; of the directors of the Bank of New Hamburg; of Schoen & Co., of New Hamburg, and of W. #### SIZE OF BATTLE SHIPS.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I present two very strong and well-written papers upon the question of the size of battle ships. As Congress will be confronted with that question during the session, I ask that the two papers presenting the opposite sides, one by Capt. A. T. Mahan, of the United States Navy, and the other by Lieut. Commander William S. Sims, United States Navy, may be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

I wish to say to Senators who take an interest in this most important question that the reading of both these papers will be found to be valuable.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine if these two documents are too long to be properly inserted in the Record. The reason why I make the inquiry is because it is a matter of extreme importance and very great interest; and public documents are not only not accessible generally to the public, but they are not seen generally by Members of Congress. While I will not make the suggestion if they are voluminous, I really think if they are short the subject-matter is of sufficient importance to depart from the usual rule and insert them in the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. They are not of great length. One great merit about each of the papers is its clearness and conciseness of statement. I have no objection that, in addition to being printed as a document and referred to the committee, they be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BACON. I hope that may be done, Mr. President. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine requests that the two papers presented by him be printed in the RECORD and also be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The papers referred to are as follows:

REFLECTIONS, HISTORIC AND OTHER, SUGGESTED BY THE BATTLE OF THE JAPAN SEA.

[By Capt. A. T. Mahan, U. S. Navy.]

REFLECTIONS, HISTORIC AND OTHER, SUGGESTED BY THE BATTLE OF THE JAPAN SEA.

[By Capt. A. T. Mahan, U. S. Navy.]

The principal and determining features of the battle of the Japan Sea have been made known to us by the official reports; but many details are wanting, and, as was justly remarked in a very able article in Blackwood's Magazine for last February, probably can never be supplied, the drama having passed too rapidly and the actors having been too busily occupied to take precise notes. The writer of the paper therefore devoted part of his space to an investigation of the problem and to an attempt to reconstitute the earlier features of the engagement, as well as its subsequent phases. It is to this discussion that I owed the study embodied in the following plan, in which I have also availed myself of some of his data, more particularly with reference to the train of the guns of either party; but the particular line of inquiry which I have followed differs, I think, somewhat from his. It is in any event merely tentative, and its principal use, except as an attempt to solve a question of reasonable professional interest, lies in familiarizing the mind with some of the conditions of the encounter and so making more easy the reflections which appear to follow naturally from considering the relative position of the combatants.

Admiral Togo in his report says that at 1.45 p. m. the Russians were first seen from his flagship "a few miles to the south." As they were known to be heading northeast, he then steered southwest, to deceive them into the impression that he meant to pass by in an opposite parallel direction. He does not report whether his fleet during this demonstration was in line abreast or line ahead. The latter might readily be presumed, but I have seen no positive statement to that effect; whereas one Russian account explicitly says: "A little after 12 (the other times of this account are a half hour fast) seventeen powerful ships of the enemy were sighted in line abreast, holding a course from nor

2.05, I draw the line  $R^\circ$   $J^\circ$  making with the northeast course an angle of 50°, giving a compass bearing of N. 5° W., or 40° forward of the Russian beam. This is conjecturally the bearing of the head of the Japanese column when round to an east course, and as part of the Russian battery would then bear but scantily, the movement of keeping off, which ensued at once, and before opening fire, would be natural. Upon the line  $R^\circ$   $J^\circ$  lay of by scale the distances 4, 5, 6, and 7 miles, which in yards would be respectively eight, ten, twelve, and fourteen thousand. Like the bearing, these distances are conjectural, but the truth very probably lies somewhere between the two extremes. Accepting them successively, and laying off from each a compass northeast, we have for each the southwest line down which the Japanese ran while the Russians were moving northeast 4 miles, from  $R^+$  to  $R^2$ . Admiral Togo has not favored us with his rate of steaming on this course, but as there was no cause for haste, rather the reverse, I presume he did not go over 2 or 3 miles to the Russian 4. Taking such distance as rather less than 3 miles, we get the several positions,  $J^+$  corresponding to  $R^2$ , according to the several estimates of the distance between the opponents at the moment when the Japanese went about and the Russians opened fire. By protractor and scale it appears that for a distance of  $R^2$ , according to the several estimates of the distance of 5 miles, S. 25° W., distant something over 12 miles; for a distance of 5 miles, S. 25° W., distant something over 12 miles; for a distance of 5 miles, the reverse admiral preserved to himself interior lines of movement—shorter distances to cover—whatever course the Russians might take, unless they retreated. That is, he secured for himself the certainty of bringing the enemy to battle, quite irrespective of any superiority of speed on his part. The course steered by each from R² and J² by their intersection complete a triangle, of which much the longer side belonged to the Russians. Not unless Togo, steering SW., had continued to the line R² T, bringing the enemy at R² to bear SSE, would the distance to be run have become equal; and the consequences of such continuance, entailing not only more distance to run, but more extreme train for his guns and less for those of the Russians, were too obvious to be tempting. Whatever use be made of this primary advantage, however, the admiral had secured it by the position taken on full information. All things considered, the most commanding bearing on which to have the enemy was due south, and it is probable that he did not greatly depart from that to either hand before going about. Again, should both fleets continue on their respective courses, east and northeast, maintaining equal speeds—as to 7² and R²—not only would they draw together, but the Japanese, having the interior line, would draw ahead at their discretion, throwing the Russian broadsides more and more out of action. Further, in order to overcome this disadvantage, the Russians would need a speed of 14 knots to a Japanese 10, or 17 to a Japanese 12—a difference of speed beyond that contemplated as possible in clean-bottomed ships by either the advocates or opponents of very high speed in battle ships. This difference in favor of the Japanese resulted from choice of position relative to the enemy's probable objects, and not from the superiority of speed they undoubtedly possessed.

Prior to the late war the importance of speed to battle ships was necessarily discussed and determined upon a priori reasoning. It will be well to see what further light may seem to be thrown upon the question by the events of the war itself. Concerning this there is necessary the warning that such illustration is inevitably partial; for necessary the warning that such illustration is inevitably partial; for the door of the concrete over the abstract, and will itself give occasion to some the odogmatic. As far as it goes, however, it will possess the advantage of the concrete over the abstract, and will itself give occasion to some theoretical reasoning based upon simple geometrical considerations, and itself but an instance of this, for the Russian aim there was not to destroy the enemy, but to escape to Vaddyostok. It was the cardinal feature of the campaign as a whole on their part, that no decided attempt was ever made to destroy the Japanese fleet by sheer hard fighting. This applies more particularly to the Port Arthur division in and August 10, 1904, in aeither of which can be traced the slightest induces of the Nelsonic maxim, "By the time the enemy has beaten as soundly, they would do no more harm this pent." Having thus and active the compelled to adopt first a defensive strategic object—that, namely, of reaching Vaddrostok with as little fighting as possible, in order to sillicion with their opponents, and also to associate to himself such their part, and the such as a sundly, they would will be such a such as a sundly in the such as the place contained. His fleet was the last maxim lope of trustal, as Togós had all along been the sole naval runs and the such as the place contained. His fleet was the last maxim lope of trustal, as Togós had all along been the sole naval runs and the such as the su close behind.

An instance partly in point was afforded in Kamimura's pursuit of the Port Arthur division of armored cruisers in August, 1904. The Rurik having been disabled in the engagement, Kamimura pressed on after her two consorts, leaving the reduction of the Rurik to two of his unarmored cruisers. The Rurick's speed being reduced and her steering gear damaged, the Japanese vessels, though inferior in force and only of equal original speed, were enabled to maintain their positions under her stern, where her power of injuring them was reduced to a minimum, and they kept her engaged until their armored vessels returned, when the Russians opened her valves and she sank. This presented the essentials of a general chase in the holding of an enemy's vessel till the main force comes up—in this case, back; and the incident of inability to steer is precisely one of the determining features in a general chase, for the rear vessel in such case can not deflect. She must keep on after her consorts; for, if she turns to fight, she facilitates the approach of the enemy's slower main body. To this chiefly was due the preponderance of injury received from a weaker opponent by the American frigate

President when chased by a British squadron in 1815. She could not turn upon her immediate assailant because of the latter's consorts following at a distance in her wake. So the British frigate Penelope hung effectively upon the quarters of the French eighty-gun ship Guillaume Tell, seeking to escape from Malta in 1800, and contributed powerfully to her capture by the squadron, the approach of which prevented the ship of the line turning her broadside on her swift but netty for

So the British frigate Penelopiung effectively upon the quarters of the French eighty-gua ship Guidanne Tell, seeking to escape from Many, 1905, the Japaness hip Guidanne Tell, seeking to escape from Many, 1905, the Japaness hattle prevented the ship of the line turning her broadside on her swift but potty for.

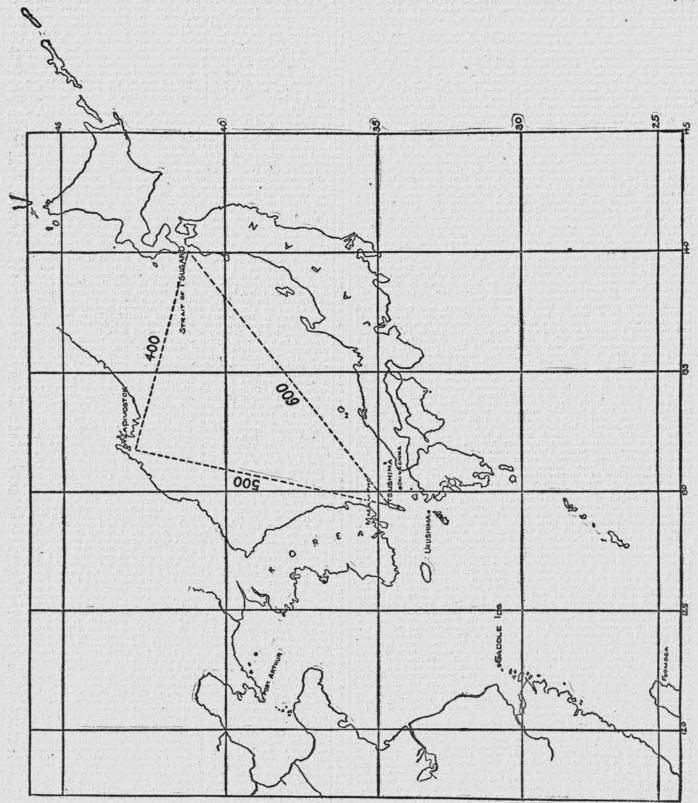

In the proper had over the Russian an advantage of 2 or 3 knots speed at the time when Riodestreaky came abresat the north point of Formosa, the moment when the strategic campaign may be said to have the proper had over the Russian and advantage of 2 or 3 knots speed to Admiral Togo? The latter had to consider that, granting the Russians had coal enough, it was open to them either to proceed by the Straits of Korea, as they did to the contract of the top of the Hussians had coal enough, it was open to them either to proceed by the Many of the Company of the Company could see the enemy with my own eyes, to know that the enemy's fighting sections comprised the whole of the second and third squafron; tenemy's slighting sections comprised the whole of the second and third squafron; tenemy's slighty were disposed in a double column formation; that their strength was placed at the head of the right column, with the special content of the column of the column

Before summarizing a conclusion, let us note one prominent feature of the battle of the Japan Sea, commonly to the partial engagement of the previous August 10, the bearing of which upon the question of speed, seems to me to have engaged little attention. One of the frequent incidents of both actions is the damage to funnels, either complete destruction or large perforation, destroying or diminishing draft, and with it speed. If the battle ships keep together, which, as a rule, they should, the fleet speed is reduced at once to that of the injured ship. This factor does not come into play in the movements which precede the action, but it may seriously affect conditions of flight and pursuit, as also the power conferred by superior engine development in subsequent operations by fleets distant from their means of repair.

The loss of a modern funnel will be like the loss of a former-day lower mast. Certainly no discussion of the utility of speed obtained at the sacrifice of gun power can be adequate if it does not take full account of this specific result, which has also a further bearing. The funnels are open to serious injury by guns of that secondary battery,

6 to 8 inch, which there is now a tendency to discard. It has long been my own opinion that the so-called "secondary battery" is really entitled to the name primary, because its effect is exerted mainly on the personnel rather than the material of a vessel; and I am glad to find this view supported by the author of the article in Blackwood, though he does not use the same words. No one is contending for no speed; but there are those who contend that speed is merely for bringing offensive power into play; that when it exceeds this, and expects to achieve success by running, it has small object, for the sea does not habitually, nor often, present positions at which by anticipating an enemy you achieve strategic effect, it sometimes does, but the rule is otherwise; and in the exceptional cases the observance of strategic considerations of position and interior lines will offen, as in Togo's recent action, accomplish quite as much as ling the enemy; offensive power within that of crushing him.

The question of primary and secondary batteries also is not one of compromise, except as defined above. The one or the other must have its superiority admitted, and the inferior be discarded or duly subordinated. As this question supposes the fleets in presence, it is tactical, not strategical. I have aiready advanced the arguments in the matter, and now will only draw attention to the fact that here again speed, better that the property of the pr

In the Proceedings of the Naval Institute for June, 1906, in an article entitled "Reflections, historic and other, suggested by the battle of the Japan Sea," Capt. A. T. Mahan, United States Navy, retired, has stated his conclusions concerning the characteristics of men-of-war best suited for increasing a nation's naval power, assuming a certain limit of expenditure for new vessels.

These conclusions are, I believe, opposed to those reached by practically all naval officers who have given this subject serious consideration; but so great is the weight of Captain Mahan's opinions that they would doubtless be accepted by those who may not be in possession of certain recently acquired information which bears with such directness and force upon the question of the fighting qualities of battle ships as apparently to demonstrate that Captain Mahan's conclusions thereon are in error.

apparently to demonstrate that Captain Mahan's conclusions thereon are in error.

In the following analysis of this question I will endeavor to show that this information is of such a fundamental nature as to necessitate a reexamination of both old and new facts, from a point of view differing widely from that taken by Captain Mahan, concerning the qualities of the design that will permit the development of the maximum concentration of effective gun fire—that is, a fleet's maximum concentration of hits.

In the first place, I beg to express the opinion that if, when Captain Mahan wrote his article, he had been in possession of certain important information that has since become available his conclusions would have been considerably modified; and while I would not presume to oppose his views as to the conclusions to be drawn from the facts as he has assumed them, and as he understands them, still I feel that I am justified in restating these facts as I understand them in the light of the new evidence above referred to, and basing thereon my conclusions:

Captain Mahan's principal conclusions may be summarized, briefly, as follows:

1. That in designing battle ships of a certain displacement we are as follows:

1. That in designing battle ships of a certain displacement we are never justified in increasing the speed, within reasonable limits, at the expense of the equivalent weight in gun power.

2. That we are not justified in substituting heavy turnet guns, such as 12-inch, for the equivalent weight of the usual intermediate guns—6-inch, etc. In other words, the the all-big-gun ship is a mistake.

3. That, considering the necessary limit of expenditures and the requirements of a navy with wide naval responsibility, we should not materially increase the size of the ships now being designed.

These conclusions are admittedly derived from, or supported by, an analysis of the available information concerning the battle of the Sea of Japan, and also upon an analysis of the battle efficiency of guns of various calibers, based upon Captain Mahan's ideas upon the subject.

In reference to this important battle, Captain Mahan has stated that many details are wanting, and probably can never be supplied, the drama having passed too rapidly and the actors having been too busily occupied to take precise notes.

Fortunately, this is no longer true, for in the same number of the Naval Institute in which Captain Mahan's article appears there is a proper of the Naval Institute in which Captain Mahan's article appears there is probabled upon very precise. The author of this paper, Lieut, R. D. White, United States Navy, is a distinguished gunnery officer who was at my request recently assigned to duty as my assistant. I am therefore informed as to the manner in which his information was obtained, and while I am not at liberty to state more in this respect than Mr. White has thought proper to give in the introductory note that precedes his article, still I may state that his plan, or chart, of the battle (herewith reproduced) was drawn to scale from the very full data (bearings, distances, and speeds) supplied by the Russian observer indicated, who also gave him the other important information contained in the article—the acquisition of all of this information fortunately being facilitated by a continuous and intimate association of two or three weeks with the observer in question, whose competence is fully established by Mr. White's testimony.

As this officer was a naval constructor, " ting at long ranges.

In the first place, it may be confidently assumed that Togo was in possession of the following important facts:

1. That his fleet speed was considerably greater than that of his enemy—the bottoms of his ships being clean and theirs foul, and there being slower ships in the Russian fleet than in his.

2. That his markkmanship was superior to that of the Russians.

3. That Russian gunnery training had for years been carried out with the object of bringing an enemy to close quarters, and that, even assuming that they had profited by their experience in the actions off Port Arthur, the Baltic fleet could not have had adequate training in long-range firing. with the object of origing an enemy to close quarters, and that, even assuming that they had profited by their experience in the actions off Port Arthur, the Baltic fleet could not have had adequate training in long-range firing.

4. That, in order to render effective the tactics indicated above, the Russian ships were heavily armed and their crews trained for rapidity

The above being true, it is clear that Admiral Togo must have gone into action with two principal objects clearly defined in his mind, namely:

1. Fight at the maximum range at which actual experience at battle practices had shown him that he could do effective hitting (about 6,000 yards) and at which he knew that the Russian fire would not be dangerous.

yards) and at which he knew that the Russian fire would not be dangerous.

2. So maneuver as to maintain the least practicable rate of change of range while concentrating his fire as frequently as possible upon the head of the enemy's column.

If he had not been able to accomplish these two objects he might still have won the battle, because the Russians were so very inferior in many other respects, but he certainly would have suffered more. For example, if the Russians had been able, by superior speed, to run in to 1,800 yards (the battle range of their choice), they would have made a large percentage of hits, and these hits would have been very effective, especially from their modern ships of French design (Suvaroff, Alexander III, Borodino, Orel).

A glance at Lieutenant White's chart will show, however, that the Japanese admiral had no difficulty (barring thick weather) in repeatedly choosing his own position (distance and bearing) with reference to the head of the enemy's fleet, and that the battle therefore resolved itself into a competition between the fire-control officers of the two fleets as to which could make the most hits, under the conditions selected by the Japanese—these conditions being, of course, very unequal, since the Japanese were able frequently to concentrate the fire of many ships upon a few of the Russians.

Let us now consider the manifest object of the Russian admiral's strategy and factics, with a view of determining why he was unable to succeed.

In the first place, we know, from a certain unpublished report, based succeed.

In the first place, we know, from a certain unpublished report, based upon indisputable authority (and which is practically confirmed by Lieutenant White's report), that the Russian battle ships were so overloaded with stores and coal that the upper edges of their heavy armor belts were well below the water line (and that therefore, in so far as hull protection was concerned, they were armored cruisers and not battle ships); also that compartments, cabins, passages, etc., were so filled with coal and stores that the men's water-closets and urinals had been blocked since leaving Saigon, and that the decks were, in consequence, in an indescribable condition.

been blocked since leaving Salgon, and that the decks were, in consequence, in an indescribable condition.

We may therefore safely assume that the Russian admiral approached the Tsushima Straits with two objects uppermost in his mind, namely:

1. The most important was to elude the Japanese and take shelter in Vladivostok until he could land his stores, dock, and refit his ships.

2. If forced to fight, to do so at the shortest range possible, where most of his shots would count.

He was defeated in both of these objects solely by the superior speed of the Japanese; assuming, of course, that he could not pass through the Straits without being detected. Once he was sighted by the Japanese, which was inevitable, their superior speed (which, as shown later, was 6 or 7 knots greater than that of the Russians) rendered impossible his escape without fighting; and (as previously shown, this superiority of speed enabled the Japanese repeatedly to concentrate upon his leading ships and thus destroy or disable them one at a time—or force them to accept defeat in a worse form, namely, by abandoning their attempt to reach Vladivostok, thus surrendering the command of the sea without inflicting any damage upon the enemy.

It is, of course, understood that, assuming all other qualities to be equal, a relatively small superiority of speed can not alone determine a victory by gun fire, under the usual "game-board" conditions; that is, where sea room is unlimited; where it is always daylight; where thick weather does not act as an occasional screen; where the slow fleet is not embarrassed by having to get anywhere in particular; where there is no convoy or fleet of essential auxiliaries to lose in case of retreat, etc.

In this case the slow fleet can prevent the fast one from taking up a position of continuous advantage by simply keeping the head of the enemy's column abeam, thus steaming on the arc of a circle of sufficiently smaller radius to counteract the superiority of speed of the fast fleet.

The sole tactical ability position of continuous advantage by simply keeping the head of the enemy's column abeam, thus steaming on the arc of a circle of sufficiently smaller radius to counteract the superiority of speed of the fast fleet.

The sole tactical ability of the slow fleet is a negative one—one of equility only as regards gun fire; it can never attain an advantage of peling able to:

(1) Refuse or accept battle.

(2) Choose his own range.

(3) Control the rate of the slow fleet always has the great advantage of being able to:

(1) Refuse or accept battle.

(2) Choose his own range.

(3) Control the rate of the slearing, thus taking advantage of the weather conditions that favor his own gun fire.

That is to say, always assuming equal tactical skill, the slow fleet can neither gain an advantage nor accomplish a definite object, while a fleet that is slightly faster can:

(1) Bring the slow one to action or refrain from so doing until the cor auxiliaries as he pleases.

(2) Can choose his own range and change it at will.

(3) Can close to fighting range when the wind and sea and sun are in the most advantageous positions for increasing the efficiency of his own gun fire, withdrawing outside of effective range when these conditions of the control o knots and that of the latter as a little more than 15. It should be noted, however, that the Japanese speed "alternated 0 to 16 knots" between 3.40 and 4.15, therefore their fleet speed was probably considerably more than 15 knots.

erably more than 15 knots.

The Japanese superiority in speed was therefore more than 6 knots, an advantage so enormous that no conceivable strategical or tactical skill and no possible augmentation of gun fire (without increasing the displacement) on the part of the Russians could have prevented their defeat, even supposing but a rudimentary knowledge of strategy and tactics on the part of the Japanese admiral, and assuming, of course, that the Russian fleet was constrained to force its way sooner or later through the straits. through the straits.

that the Russian fleet was constrained to force its way sooner or later through the straits.

Before leaving this question of speed it may be well to point out that if the speeds of the Japanese and Russian fleets had been reversed Admiral Togo could not possibly have prevented the Russians (1) escaping to Vladivostok, or (2) bringing the Japanese to battle at short range, if they had so desired. This is clear by a reference to Mr. White's chart. For example, at 1.55 p. m. the head of the Japanese column bore about WNW. from the Russian flagship, distant about 3.5 miles, so that the Russian ships, by steering an easterly course, could have left the Japanese out of sight, and then, hauling to the northward, could have gained Vladivostok.

Furthermore, Admiral Togo's comparatively easy strategy would have been colleged to await the Russians off Vladivostok, out of range of the outer forts, in a region of frequent and dense fogs, and do them what damage he could as they passed in.

It may also be pointed out that shortly after 4.15 p. m. (see the chart) the Japanese lost sight of the Russians, due to thick weather, and steamed 7 or 8 miles to the southward in search of them, and when they turned to the northward in pursuit they were about 10 miles astern; therefore, if the Russians had had even one-quarter of a knot superiority in speed they would have arrived at Vladivostok a couple of hours ahead of their pursuers.

It is of course admitted that the superior speed of new ships can not at once be fully utilized while in fleet forweries with closured.

It is of course admitted that the superior speed of new ships can not at once be fully utilized while in fleet formation with slower ones, and that it would be very convenient if all nations would decide not to exceed a certain speed in the design of new vessels. But since such an agreement is probably impracticable; since at present they insist upon building large 20-knot battle ships, should we build 16-knot ships with about one-half the heavy gun power? To do so would mean that twenty-five years hence, when most of the existing ships will be on the scrap heap, we would still have a 16-knot fleet, while our possible enemies would have 20-knot fleets of large vessels each with about twice as much gun power. We would have more vessels—a longer fleet—but that would avail us nothing against an enemy having units of about double the gun power concentrated in a fleet about one-half the length of ours and with the necessary speed frequently to take up positions of advantage, thereby enabling them further to concentrate their fire whenever the maneuvers of the enemy were restricted by any of the causes above mentioned.

of ours and with the necessary speed frequently to take up positions of advantage, thereby enabling them further to concentrate their fire whenever the maneuvers of the enemy were restricted by any of the causes and the statement of the causes. Manifestly one of the very greatest advantages afforded by large vessels is a tactical one, namely, the inherent ability to concentrate double the gun power in a line of battle about one-half the sale long as that necessarily required for ships of about one-half the sale long as that necessarily required for ships of about one-half the sale long as that necessels from the point of view of the control of gun fire age of large vessels from the point of view of the control of gun fire and religiously the property of the control of gun fire and religiously the property of the control of gun fire and religiously the heavest armor. Captain Mahan lays great stress upon the alleged effect of the loss of funnels, or smoke pipes, saying that the resulting loss of speed would be so great that "the loss of a modern funnel will be like the loss of a former-day mast." This appears to me to be a great exaggeration. As I understand this matter, the principal reason for building a tall funnel is to increase the natural draft, and thus render steaming more economical in time of peace. With lower funnels the natural draft is smaller, as the column of hot air is shorter, and this necessitates the use of forced or "assisted" draft during ordinary cruising. Tall funnels have always been a mistake from a military point of view, because when a vessel having them goes into battle and forced draft is put on to develop her maximum speed the tall funnel adds very little to the draft by reason of its height. It has been reported that the British ship Edgar lost two of her funnels in a gale of wind without any material diminution in her speed. If, therefore, we should be obliged to go into battle with our present absundly high funnels, we may regard their being shot away or riddled with holes with co

fundamental principles of naval marksmanship developed by gunnery officers.

Therefore we have but to decide what the caliber for each class of ships should be, a decision which should present no special difficulty, provided it be first determined how we are to defeat the enemy—whether by the destruction of his ships (by sinking them or disabling their guns) or by the destruction or demoralization of their personnel. In this connection the following facts should first be clearly understood, namely:

1. Turrets are now, for the first time, being designed that are practically invulnerable to all except heavy projectiles. Instead of having sighting hoods on the turret roof, where sights, pointers, and officers are exposed to disablement (as frequently happened on the Russian ships), there will be prismatic sights projecting laterally from the gun trunnions through small holes in the side walls of the turret, and the gun ports will be protected by 8-inch armor plates, so arranged that no fragments of shells can enter the turrets.

2. On the proposed all-big-gun ships the heavy armor belt will be about 8 feet above the water line and extending from end to end. The conning tower, barbettes, etc., will be of heavy armor; and there being no intermediate battery (which could not be protected by heavy armor on account of its extent), it follows that in battle all of the gunnery personnel, except the small, single fire-control party aloft, will be behind heavy armor, and that, therefore, neither the ship nor her personnel can be materially injured by small-caliber guns.

Considering, therefore, that our object in designing a battle ship is that she may be able to meet those of our possible enemies upon at least equal terms, it seems evident that it would be extremely unwise to equip our new ships with a large number of small guns that are incapable of inflicting material damage upon the all-big-gun, one-caliber ships of our enemies, or upon the personnel manning their guns.

Captain Mahan states that it has long been his fired by each caliber we may assume a "probability of a proportionate number of hits."

As a matter of fact, Captain Mahan has drawn his conclusions from the "volume of fire" of the different calibers instead of from their volume of hitting, or "rapidity of hitting," which is the only true standard of efficiency for all kinds of gun fire. He has also assumed that the Japanese rapidity of 6-inch fire was about four times as great as that of the 12-inch fire, when, as a matter of fact, it was probably not much more than twice as great. We have, of course, no actual figures, but as we know that 12-inch guns can fire two shots per minute (and with improved loading gear this rapidity will be increased) and that 6-inch controlled firing is at the rate of four shots per minute, and as we also know that since 1901 the Japanese have used the most modern methods of training, we may safely assume that the relation between their 6-inch and 12-inch rapidity of fire is about as above stated, though both calibers may be actually less or more rapid.

Referring, however, to Lieutenant White's article, page 613, we may form a tolerably fair estimate of the relative rapidity of hitting of the 12-inch and 6-inch guns. He estimates that the Japanesse fired 1,275 heavy shell (12-inch) and made 250 hits, or 19.6 per cent, which was good shooting, considering the long ranges and the unfavorable weather. As for the "ninety-odd secondary guns" (Captain Mahan's estimate), if we assume that, on an average, each fired two and one-half times as many shots as each 12-inch gun, the total number of shots was 16,875 (2.5 times 75 times 90). If they had made a "proportionate number of hits," or 19.6 per cent, they would have scored 3,307 hits, or about thirteen times as many as the 12-inch hits, which we know they did not make.

Unfortunately we can not obtain the exact figures, though we can of hits, thirteen times as many as the 12-inch hits, which we know they did not make.

Unfortunately we can not obtain the exact figures, though we can make an estimate that will be close enough to show the comparative hitting capacity of these guns. For example, the Orel "was struck 42 times by 12-inch shells and over 100 by 6-inch and 8-inch shells." She was fourth in the line at the beginning of the action and second at the end; therefore she at no time received the brunt of the Japanese fire, which was directed principally at the leading vessel. This accounts for the comparatively small number of 12-inch hits that this vessel received. We know that after her guns were disabled she was pounded by minor cruisers having 6-inch and 8-inch guns, and that at one stage of the action (2.55 p. m.) she sustained the fire of six armored cruisers at a range of less than 5,000 yards. We may therefore fairly conclude that she received more 6-inch and 8-inch hits than any other vessel.

mored crulsers at a range of less than 5,000 yards. We may therefore fairly conclude that she received more 6-inch and 8-inch hits than any other vessel.

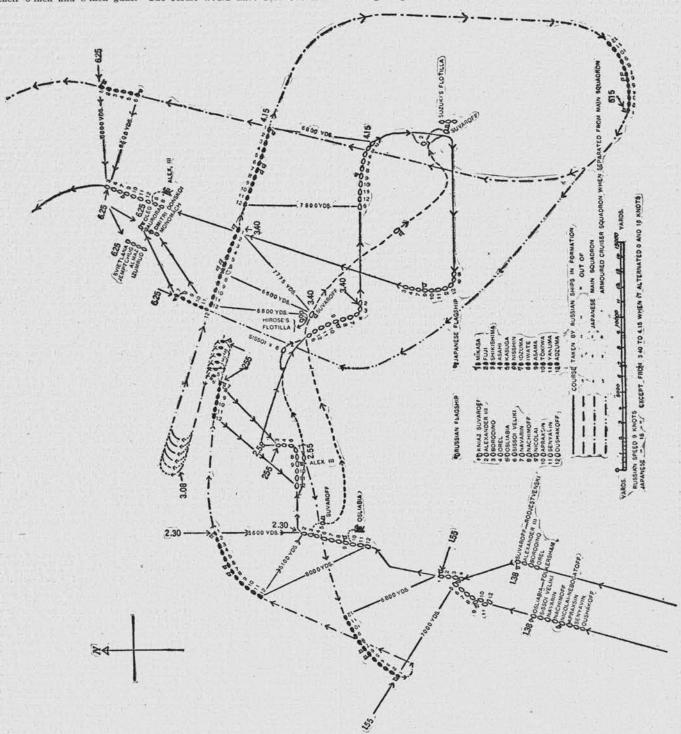

We will assume, however, that the Suvaroff received as many. This vessel was fearfully exposed, first at the beginning of the action and again at 3.40 p. m., when she sustained the concentrated fire of 12 battle ships and cruisers, which accounts for her being "struck over 100 times by 12-inch shells alone." Assuming, therefore, that the Alexander III, Borodino, and Osliabia each received 50 6-inch and 8-inch hits, we have a total of 350 hits out of 16.875 shots, or 2.1 per cent. That is to say, they fired 50 pounds of the smaller projectiles for every pound that hit, whereas they fired only 5 pounds of 12-inch metal for every pound that hit, which accords with the law that we have deduced from our target practices, namely, that the smaller the gun the more projectiles you must waste to make a hit; but as the Japanese battle ships and armored cruisers carried these guns, they were, of course, justified in firing them as best they could without diminishing the rapidity of the 12-inch guns. They did not, however, fire any of their small guns—those less than 6-inch—because to do so would have caused too much "interference" with more important guns, though the "hail" of small projectiles, that is so popular in newspaper accounts, would have been very effective if the shots had hit.

Let us now consider what would have been the probable effect if the designers of the Japanese battle ships had installed as many 12-inch turret guns as possible in place of the forty small guns. They could doubtless have mounted one turret forward and two turrets aft on the center line, or vice versa, thus increasing the heavy broadside fire by 50 per cent—that is, six 12-inch guns instead of four. The result would have been 125 more 12-inch hits. Similarly, if the cruisers had been designed to carry heavy guns only, they could doubtless each have mounted at least four heavy turret guns of, say, 10-inch or 11-inch caliber, thus substituting 32 heavy turret guns in place of all of their 6-inch and 8-inch guns. The result would have been 500 more heavy-gun hits, which, added to the 125 additional hits made by the battle ships, make, in all, 625 heavy-gun hits in place of the 350 hits by 6-inch and 8-inch guns.

In other words, if the Japanese vessels had been designed in accordance with the principles of modern gun fire (had been all big-gun ships), their fleet would have developed a greater rapidity of hitting with heavy guns (875 hits) than it actually did develop with 12-inch, 8-inch, and 6-inch guns (700 hits)—and this for the simple reason that at long ranges the hitting capacity of their heavy guns was 19.6 per cent, while that of the small guns was only 2.1 per cent. Moreover, as a matter of fact, a fleet having but one caliber of heavy guns on each vessel would have been able to make still more hits in a given time because their fire-control officers would not have suffered from the "interference" (delay) caused by the more numerous discharges of the smaller guns.

Thus we see that at modern battle ranges an all big-gun fleet will actually deliver a greater volume of hitting—a greater number of hits, twice the weight of metal hitting and twice the weight in bursting charges—than a fleet of mixed-battery ships of the same nominal power.

As for the comparative moral effect of the explosion of 12-inch and 6-inch shells, it seems to me that when we compare the difference in weight of the bursting charges (that of the 12-inch is 38 pounds, while the 6-inch is only 4 pounds) and the difference in the strength of the walls of the shell, there can be no doubt that the moral effect of the former is very much greater than that of the latter.

As reliable evidence of this effect, I may cite the testimony of Captain Semenoff, as reported editorially in the Boston Herald of September 3, 1906:

"He appears from his statements to have occupied the position on the Baltic fleet of a trained observer having no official duties to perform, but simply to make notes, and from shortly after noon on the 27th of May until 7.40 p. m., when in consequence of wounds he was compelled to abandon his post; he had nothing to do but to watch and record the events of the battle * * * as seen by him from the rear bridge of the battle ship Suvaroff, Admiral Rodjestvensky's flag-compelled to abandon his post; he had nothing to do but to watch and record the events of the battle " as seen by him from the rear bridge of the battle ship Swaron," Admiral Rodjestvensky's flagship.

"After fire had been opened between the combatants Captain Semenoff was struck by the fact that the 4-foot shells (12-inch) of the Japanese invariably burst on hitting the water, but the moment they obtained the range that the effect of their fire was terrific. A young lieutenant came up and asked him if this recalled his previous experience of August 10, at which time the Csarevitch was hit nineteen times by heavy shells in the course of several hours' fighting. In order to keep up the courage of the inquirer, Captain Semenoff said, 'Yes,' but his real opinion was that he had never seen or imagined such accuracy of fire, the shells coming one after another without interruption, and hitting so frequently that he could not count the number of hits. (This was doubtless at 1.55 and at 2.30 p. m., when practically the whole of the Japanese fire of twelve ships was concentrated on the Swaron, Wm. S. S.) The force of their explosion was so great that it seemed to him that mines were exploding under the deck or against the ship's side. " At 3.20 p. m., about an hour and a half from the time the first gun was fired, Captain Semenoff was obliged to record in his notebook that the battle was lost."

If they were 6-inch shells that made Captain Semenoff think that "mines were exploding," it is probable that 12-inch shells would have impressed him as being earthquakes, and that he would accordingly have made special mention of the fact.

If it be admitted, from a consideration of the necessities of modern gunnery, that it would "be unwise ever to build a man-of-war of any type whatever having more than one caliber of guns in her main battery," and if it be admitted that the heavier the shell the greater the percentage of hits and the greater its effect in disabling ships and demoralizing their personnels, it is evident that the various calibers.

Referring, now, to a point previously indicated, but not explained, I beg to invite special attention to the tactical advantage that we shall gain by having battle ships of large displacement—an advantage which appears to me so great as entirely to outweigh all of the alleged advantages of numbers, mentioned by Captain Mahan. This may best be illustrated by contrasting the tactical qualities of two fleets, one of large vessels and one of small.

Before doing so, however, it may be well to state my understanding of the principal tactical qualities that are desirable in a fleet. These are:

1. The compactness of the battle formation.
2. The flexibility of the fleet as a unit—that is, its ability to change formation in the least possible time and space with safety to its units.

For example, suppose two fleets of eight vessels each, composed of slips that are alike in all respects, and suppose their personnel to be equally skillful, with the exception of the commander in chief, whose difference in energy and ability is such that one fleet has been so drilled as to be able to maneuver with precision and safety while maintaining one-half the distance between its units that the other fleet talning one-half the distance between its units that the other fleet requires.

This is putting the extreme case, but it shows:

1. That the short fleet, being about half the length of the other one, can complete certain important maneuvers (such as Admiral Togo performed at 1.55 p. m. and 2.55 p. m.) in about one-half the time and one-half the space required for similar maneuvers of the long fleet.

2. That when ranged alongside each other, as shown in fig. 1, the defeat of the long fleet is inevitable, since the rapidity of hitting of the individual units is assumed to be equal, and each of the four leading ships of the long fleet receives about twice as many hits as she can return, though the eighth ship of the short fleet would suffer a preponderance of gun fire from the fifth or sixth vessel of the long fleet—the seventh and eighth being too far astern to do much damage, as would also be the case if the long fleet had several more vessels astern of these.

It is because of the principle here illustrated that the constant effort of competent flag officers is to reduce the distance between the units of their fleets to the minimum that can be maintained with safety under battle conditions—that is, while steaming at full speed, without the aid of stadimeters, sextants, and other appliances that should be used only for preliminary drills.

Doubtless some flag officers, by constant competitive exercises in for preliminary drills.

Doubtless some flag officers, by constant competitive exercises in maneuvering, may succeed in attaining an interval between ships that is less by 15 or 20 per cent than that attained by others; but manifestiy there is hardly any possibility of much greater improvement in this respect, because the minimum practical interval between ships depends upon their lengths and maneuvering qualities. For example, the German interval is 300 meters from center to center, while larger ships, say 400 feet long, require about 400 yards, and those between 450 and 500 feet in length require about 450 yards.

If we accept Captain Mahan's advice and build comparatively small, low-speed battle ships, while our possible enemies build large, swift, all-big-gun ships, it seems clear that we will sacrifice the enormous advantages of fleet compactness and flexibility, the superior effect of heavy gun fire and the ability to concentrate our fire—the loss of these advantages to be fully realized twenty-five years hence when our enemies have fleets of big ships while we still have those of our present type. In order clearly to illustrate the above, I will assume a fleet of ten 20-knot battle ships of about 20,000 tons displacement, each having a main battery of five 12-inch, double-gun turrets, or a broadside fire of eight 12-inch guns, disposed as in the Dreadwought type—that is, one turret forward, one on each beam, well forward, and two aft on the center line.

Assume the cost of these ships to be $10,000,000 each, or $100,000,000 for the feet, and assume that the same sum of money will build a feet of twenty battle ships (though the number would in reality be considerably less) of the smaller type, of, say, 13,000 tons and 16 knots speed, each armed with two 12-inch, double-gun turrets, or a broad-side of four 12-inch guns, and as many of the smaller guns, recommended by Captain Mahan, as can be mounted upon this displacement. It is further assumed that, as all of the gun crews of the feet of large vessels are behind heavy armor, in the 12-inch turrets of new design (heretofore described) neither the crews nor the guns can be materially injured by the intermediate guns of the fleet of small vessels; whereas, on the contrary, the majority of the men composing the gun crews of the small vessels (all but about ninety, for the two 12-inch turrets and their ammunition supply) are behind the armor of the intermediate guns—necessarily light on account of its great extent—and that these guns and their crews must be disabled or destroyed early in an action. It is, therefore, evidently well within the truth to assume that the gun fire of each large vessel will be more than twice as effective as that of each small one.

If the length of a large ship is 500 feet, and a small one 400 feet, guns and their crews must be disabled or destroyed early in an action. It is, therefore, evidently well within the truth to assume that the gun fire of each large vessel will be more than twice as effective as that of each small one.

If the length of a large ship is 500 feet, and a small one 400 feet, and the interval between centers is, respectively, 450 and 400 yards, it follows that, when in column of vessels, the long fleet (small vessels) is 3.9 miles long, while the short fleet (large vessels) is 2.1 miles. That is to say, the long fleet (L) has a broadside fire of less than twenty-one big guns for each mile of length, while the short fleet (S) has thirty-eight guns per mile—a concentration of gun fire that is inherent in the design of the large vessels, and while he conceivable tactical skill on the part of the small ones could offset.

The tactical advantage of this concentration of gun fire may be shown graphically by the following diagrams of fleets S and L.

From fig. 2, which shows S in a position of disadvantage, the rear vessels outfanked, it is apparent that the first nine vessels of the L fleet can be destroyed by the first nine of the S fleet, since the latter have more than twice the gun power of the former, while No. 10 S can sustain the fire of both 10 and 11 L, but not that of 12, 13, and 14 L flest one whose fire would be effective against 10 S, the rear vessels of the S fleet can (by reason of having more than twice the individual gun fire of their individual opponents) protect themselves by dividing the fire of 10 S between 13 and 14 L; 9 S between 11 and 12 L; 8 S between 9 and 10 L, and 7 S between 7 and 8 L, thus leaving the first six vessels of S, an advantage that is possible only with big ships, and this advantage is of great importance, because when the S fleet is taken at least two of the enemy.

Observe that, even when the L fleet is in the advantageous position shown in fig. 2, no increase in the number of vessels in the L fleet can possibly prevent the successive destruction maneurer with greater ease and frequently in much less time—an advantage that is in some cases analogous to superior speed.

For example, the time necessary to communicate a signal to the twenty vessels of the L fleet, and be sure it is understood, and for this fleet to complete a change of course in column, so as to make a simultaneous movement, would be at least twice as long as that required for the ten vessels of the 8 fleet.

It follows, of course, from the above that as soon as we build any fast vessels of the large displacement above indicated and put them in the line of battle with 16-knot ships, we strengthen the fleet much more than if we added as many 16-knot ships as could be built for the cost of the big ships; for though we can not at once utilize the superior speed of the big ships, we have nevertheless increased the compactness of our fleet, diminished the number of units, and therefore, for the reasons given above, have rendered it a superior tactical unit, which means that with equal skill it would outmaneuver a fleet of the same cost composed of small vessels throughout.

It should be noted, also, that if we place two only of these large ships at the head of a column of small vessels, each having one-half of the broadside fire of the former, we not only render the fleet more flexible by shortening it by more than 2,000 feet, but we strengthen our fleet at the weakest point by concentrating within a distance of 1,800 feet a broadside fire equivalent to that of four vessels occupying a space of 4,000 feet. The above advantages are evidently so great that the alleged value of homogeneity of units is not worth considering.

Concerning the alleged strategic value of numbers and assuming that Captain Mahan's statement that "a nation with wide naval responsibilities must have numbers in proportion" means that we would better spend our available appropriations in building small vessels rather than large ones, in order to facilitate dispersing them over the world, I beg to say that, in my opinion, the squadrons of seven and ten vessels, respectively. The former squadron would be 1.4 miles long, with a broadside fire of forty 12-inch guns per mile, and the latter 2.1 miles long, with a broadside fire of twenty 12-inch and twenty 8-inch (neglecting the smaller guns as not effective against any of the armor of the Dreadnought class).

The above assumes that a nation with even the widest naval responsibilities would ever deem it advisable to disperse their naval units throughout the world, even in time of peace, thus diminishing individual efficiency, unity of purpose and action, and the indispensable ability to maneuver large fleets at battle speed. (Rodjestvensky's fleet had been maneuvered but once as a fleet before the battle of the sea of Japan.)

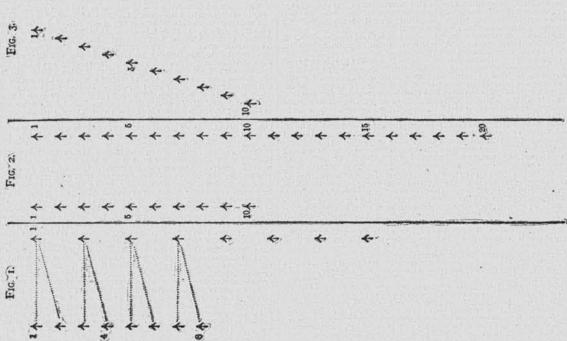

Japan.)

I had always supposed that the subdivision in time of peace of a nation's fighting units into numerous independent squadrons was due more to personal reasons than to a consideration of the principles of naval training and strategy, which latter seems to be more correctly illustrated by the rapid concentration that takes place when war is imminent. I understand that where the command of the sea is involved a nation is not deterred from going to war by the state of dispersion of a rival nation's battle ships, but by the knowledge that he has a certain number, that they possess certain material fighting qualities, and that they have been continuously trained to a high degree of individual and fleet efficiency by concentration in one or more large fleets.

It is for the above reasons, I believe, that the Naval War College has for a number of years consistently advocated all-big-gun, one-caliber ships and the concentration in time of peace of all our heavy fighting ships under one command in the Atlantic, thence to be dispersed in squadrons of the required size to meet the requirements of the situation, after rather than before we know who our enemy is to be.

If it be claimed that it would be better to reduce the speed of the large vessel to 16 knots and put the weight saved into guns, it may be replied that heavy turret guns can not be mounted to advantage (so as to increase the hitting capacity of the vessel) without very considerably increasing the size of the ship, because the number of heavy turrets that can be placed to advantage is governed largely by the length of the ship—which increases slowly with the displacement. This point is fully discussed in a recent article in a German publication. I do not remember the displacements used by the author to illustrate the principle, but supposing the ones quoted below to be correct, he shows that if it requires a displacement of 20,000 tons to obtain a broadside fire of, say, eight 12-lnch turret guns, you could not advantageously mount any additional turrets on 21,000 or 22,000 tons, but would have to go to 25,000 or 26,000 tons to obtain the necessary space. And, conversely, if you design a 20,000-ton battle ship for 16 instead of 20 knots, you can not utilize the weight saved to increase the gun power by adding 12-inch turrets, as you could by adding a number of intermediate guns. It is now hardly necessary to state that adding superimposed turrets (by which the number of guns could be doubled, if the weights permitted) does not materially increase the fitting capacity of the ship as a whole, because of the "interference" caused by having four guns in one two-story turret, while it decreases her defensive power by adding to the vertical height of her vital targets.

Captain Mahan characterizes the sudden inclination in all navies to increase the size of the new battle ships (from about 15,000 to about 20,000 tons) as a "willful premature antiquating of good vessels * * * a growing and wanton evil." If these words are intended in their true meaning, the statement is to me incomprehensible. I can understand an individual being willful and wanton, but I can not believe that the naval officers of the world could, with denly and uniformly inspired in this manner. On the contrary, it seems to me that the mere fact of there being a common demand for such large vessels is conclusive evidence that there must be a common cause that is believed to justify the demand.

This common cause is undoubtedly a common belief that the same amount of money expended for large war vessels will add more to a nation's naval power than the same amount expended for smaller vessels; for it can not reasonably be assumed that the tax-ridden nations of Europe expend their great naval budgets willfully and wantonly. Undoubtedly each nation earnestly strives so to expend these sums as to derive the greatest increase of naval power. The same is true in reference to their armies. As the mechanical arts improve, each nation endeavors to improve its war material. When a nation adopts new rifles it is not a willful premature antiquating of several million excellent ones; it is a case of force majeure—it must adopt them or suffer a relative loss of military efficiency; and it must make no mistake as to the relative efficiency of its weapons. In 1870 the French suffered a humiliating defeat as a direct result of the colossal conceit which rendered them incapable of accepting conclusive evidence that the German field artillery was greatly superior to theirs.

The same law—that of necessity—governs the evolution of battle ships. As might have been expected, this evolution has, as a rule, been gradual as regards increased displacement. The exception is the recent sudden increase (4,000 to 5,000 tons) in displacement. This exception, therefore, needs explanation. As partially indicated heretofore, it was due to a complete change of opinion as to the hitting capacity of guns of various calibers. This is now well understood by all officers who have recently been intimately associated with the new methods of gunnery training. These methods have demonstrated this point in such a manner as to leave no doubt in our minds as to the correctness of our conclusions. The rapi ception of the epoch-making principles of the new methods of training belongs exclusively to Capt. (now Rear-Admiral) Percy Scott, director of target practice of the British navy, who has, I believe, done more in this respect to improve naval marksmanship than all of the naval officers who have given their attention to this matter since the first introduction of rifled cannon on men-of-war. Nor should we forget that this degree of improvement was rendered possible by the introduction of telescope sights, the successful application of which to naval guns was made by Commander B. A. Fiske, United States Navy, as early as 1892.) As soon as the above facts gained general acceptance in Great Britain and the United States, the evolution of the all-big-gun, one caliber battle ship became a foregone conclusion; and the reason for the great increase in displacement, as I understand it, is simply that you can not build an efficient ship of this class on less than about 20,000 tons, because you can not mount more than two 12-inch turrets to advantage upon a battle ship of much less displacement, because the length and breadth are not sufficient.

We are obliged to do the best we could in this respect upon 16,000 tons, because Congress fixed that as the maximum "trial" displacement; but the resulting design is not satisfactory (except in the newspapers), for, though our 16,000-tonner has the same broadside fire as the Dreadnought (having four double-gun turrets on the center line), she has 50 per cent less bow fire, and a much lower freeboard—the forecastle and poop decks being, respectively, about 18 and 10 feet above the water line, whereas the Dreadnought is an efficient seagoing battle ship, capable of using her guns while steaming at full speed in any sea in while steaming at full speed in any sea in while steaming at full speed in any sea in while steaming at full speed in any sea in while treamonably accurate aiming could be done. The profile of this ship is that of a scout, her forward turret being mounted upon a h knots).

It would undoubtedly be desirable if we could procure an international agreement that no nation would adopt for its armies a rifle superior to that now used. Islinitarly it would be destrable if the dispersion of the control of the con ships—I believe it has already been clearly shown that, besides being necessarily superior at long ranges to ordinary battle ships (having intermediate guns), they are also superior to them at all ranges, because of the superior protection of the big guns and their gun crews—not to mention the superior hull protection.

In addition to the superior individual and tactical advantages of large vessels, they also possess the following economical advantages:

1. A fleet of ten 20,000-ton ships, each having a broadside fire of eight 12-inch guns (or 80 in all), would cost about one hundred millions.

1. A fleet of ten 20,000-ton ships, each having a broadside fire of eight 12-inch guns (or 80 in all), would cost about one hundred and thirty millions, though I previously assumed the cost of these fleets to be equal, in order to accentuate the tactical value of large ships.

3. It requires less men to man the main-battery guns of an all-biggun ship than of a mixed-battery ship. For example, it requires less men to serve the ten 12-inch guns of the Dreadnought than the four 12-inch and sixteen 6-inch guns of the Missouri.

4. It will require no more men for the Dreadnought's crew than it would for the Missouri's, if she had a full complement of men (as should be that of the Missouri or Louisiana, because the former requires but one fire-control party, while the latter ships require, respectively, two and three parties, as well as more officers for the fleet of small vessels ship, it will require 8.000 men and 200 officers for ten all-big-gun ships, and about 16,000 men and 400 officers for the fleet of small vessels having the same broadside fire of the same troadside fire of

ADDITIONAL CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom had been referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Clapp December 6, 1906, reported favorably thereon, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved. That the Committee on Indian Affairs be authorized to employ an additional clerk until March 4, 1907, who shall be paid at the rate of $120 per month out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom had been referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Platt December 5, 1906, reported favorably thereon, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses incurred in the conduct of the inquiry into the causes of delay in completing the work of the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, under the provisions of Senate resolution No. 175, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon proper vouchers approved by the chairman of the Committee on Printing.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom had been referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Scott December 18, 1906, reported favorably thereon, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided for.

EDWARD P. STRICKLAND.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask leave to call up from the Calendar for indefinite postponement the bill (S. 6836) granting an increase of pension to Edward P. Strickland.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota calls up the bill indicated by him. Without objection, the Chair will lay the bill before the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. On account of the death of the claimant, move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming introduced a bill (S. 7777) for the relief of Laura Secondine and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 7778) for the relief of Andrew J. Baker; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims. He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions

A bill (S. 7779) granting an increase of pension to Thomas G. Pratt;

A bill (S. 7780) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Burton;

A bill (S. 7781) granting an increase of pension to William A. Hope; and

A bill (S. 7782) granting an increase of pension to Henry F.

Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. BURNHAM) introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7783) granting an increase of pension to Edwin C. Barnard (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7784) granting an increase of pension to Franklin L. Felch (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7785) granting an increase of pension to Carlo J. Emerson (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 7786) granting an increase of pension to Channing M. Snow

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 7787) for the relief of Joseph R. Howell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims. He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7788) granting a pension to Benjamin Brown; A bill (S. 7789) granting an increase of pension to Samuel C. Bernhard; and

A bill (S. 7790) granting a pension to Minnie A. Wells.

Mr. KEAN introduced a bill (S. 7791) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of New Jersey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

Mr. LONG introduced a bill (S. 7792) granting an increase of pension to Maria W. Howe; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment providing that the lands heretofore withdrawn under the provisions of the act approved June 21, 1906, authorizing a drainage survey of the lands ceded by the Chippewa Indians, shall be subject to entry, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary propriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK of Montana (by request) submitted an amendment proposing to confirm the grants to and title of the Raven Mining Company in and to sixty-three claims on the Uintah Indian Reservation, Utah, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL COLLEGES.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that 500 additional copies be printed of Senate Document 189. The supply has been exhausted. It is a document relating to agricultural colleges, and it is short, comprising seven pages.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks that 500 additional copies of Senate Document 189 be printed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The order was subsequently reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That 500 additional copies of Senate Document No. 189, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, Colleges for the Benefit of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts, be printed for the use of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION OF BLACK SANDS OF PACIFIC SLOPE.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to furnish to the Senate a report on the progress of the investigation of the electric smelting of iron ores (included in the investigation of the black sands of the Pacific slope), and an expression of his opinion as to whether or not this investigation should be continued.

SHORTAGE OF CARS.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to send to the Senate, at the earliest practicable time, a transcript of the testimony taken by the Commission recently at Kansas City and St. Louis, respecting the shortage of cars for the movement of freight, particularly live stock.

MRS. EMILY MILLER.

Mr. MONEY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3423) for the relief of Mrs. Emily Miller, with all the accompanying papers be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

GEORGE A. TUCKER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5041) granting an increase of pension to George A. Tucker; which was, in line 8, to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four" before the word "dollars."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and ask a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. McCumber, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Taliaferro as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM H. KIMBALL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4908) granting an increase of pension to William H. Kimball; which was, in line 8, to strike out "twenty" and insert "sixteen" before the word "dollars."

Mr. McCUMBER. I make the same motion in reference to this bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. McCumber, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Taliaferro as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

BETTIE MAY VOSE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6833) granting an increase of pension to Bettie May Vose; which was, in line 8, to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-five" before the word

Mr. McCUMBER. I make the same motion regarding this

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. McCumber, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Taliaferro as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MICHAEL V. HENNESSY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the Interior to set apart certain land on the White Earth Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, for an Indian town site, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian apout "twenty" and insert "twelve" before the word "dollars." Mr. McCUMBER. I make the same motion in reference to

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. McCumber, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Taliaferro as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PROJECTED INTERCONTINENTAL BAILWAY.

Mr. CULLOM. Some time ago I asked that a certain document be printed. It turns out that there were quite a number of mistakes in the printing, and I ask that it be reprinted and printed correctly.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That Senate Document No. 504, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, "Projected Intercontinental Railway through the Three Americas," be reprinted.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was

To the Senate:

To the Senate:

In my message to the Senate treating of the dismissal, without honor, of certain named members of the three companies of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, I gave the reports of the officers upon which the dismissal was based. These reports were made in accordance with the custom in such cases; for it would, of course, be impossible to preserve discipline in the Army save by pursuing precisely the course that in this case was pursued. Inasmuch, however, as in the Senate question was raised as to the sufficiency of the evidence, I deemed it wise to send Major Blocksom and Assistant to the Attorney-General Purdy to Brownsville to make a thorough investigation on the ground in reference to the matter. I herewith transmit Secretary Taft's report, and the testimony taken under oath of the various witnesses examined in the course of the investigation. I also submit various exhibits, including maps of Brownsville and Fort Brown, photographs of various buildings, a letter from Judge Parks to his wife, together with a bandoleer, 33 empty shells, 7 ball cartridges, and 4 clips picked up in the streets of Brownsville within a few hours after the shooting; 3 steel-jacketed bullets and some scraps of the casings of other bullets picked out of the houses into which they had been fired. A telegram from United States Commissioner R. B. Creager, at Brownsville, announces that 6 additional bullets—like the others, from Sprincfield rifles—taken from buildings in Brownsville, with supporting affidavits, have since been sent to the Secretary of War.

It appears from the testimony that on the night of the 13th of August, 1906, several crimes were committed by some person or persons in the city of Brownsville. Among these were the following:

(a) The murder of Frank Natus.

(b) The assault with intent to kill Mr. and Mrs Hale Odin, and their little boy, who were in the window of the Miller Hotel.

(c) The shooting at and slightly wounding of Preclado.

These crimes were certainly committed by some person of Brownsville, culmi

The evidence, as will be seen, shows beyond any possibility of honest question that some individuals among the colered troops whom I have dismissed committed the outrages mentioned; and that some or all of the other individuals whom I dismissed had knowledge of the deed and shielded from the law those who committed it.

The only motive suggested as possibly influencing anyone else was a desire to get rid of the colored troops, so strong that it impelled the citizens of Brownsville to shoot up their own houses, to kill one of their own number, to assault their own police, wounding the lieutenant, who had been an officer for twenty years—all with the purpose of discrediting the negro troops. The suggestion is on its face so ludicrously impossible that it is difficult to treat it as honestly made. This theory supposes that the assailants succeeded in obtaining the uniform of the negro soldiers; that before starting on their raid they got over the fence of the fort unchallenged, and without discovery by the negro troops opened fire on the town from within the fort; that they blacked their faces so that at least fourteen eyewitnesses mistook them for negroes; that they disguised their voices as being those of negroes. They were not Mexicans, for they were heard by various witnesses who heard them speak mistook their voices as being those of negroes. They were not Mexicans, for they were heard by various witnesses to speak in English. The weapons they used were Springfield rifies; for the ammunition which they used was that of the Springfield rifie and no other, and could not have been used in any gun in Texas or any part of the Union or in Mexico, or in any other part of the world, save only in the Springfield now used by the United States troops, including the negro troops in the garrison at Brownsville, and by no other persons save these troops—a weapon which had only been in use by the United States troops for some four or five mon private citizens.

The cartridge used will go into one other rifle used in the United States, when specially chambered—the Winchester of the '95 model—but it will rarely if ever go off when in it; and, moreover, the bullets picked out of the buildings show the markings of the four so-called "lands," which come from being fired through the Springfield, but not through the Winchester, the latter showing six. The bullets which I herewith submit, which were found in the houses, could not therefore have been fired from a Winchester or any other sporting rifle, although the cartridges might have been fired from a Krag, but the cartridges would not have gone into a Krag. Taking the shells and the bullets together, the proof is conclusive that the new Springfield rifle was the weapon used by the midnight assassins, and could not by any possibility have been any other rifle of any kind in the world. This of itself establishes the fact that the assailants were United States soldiers, and would be conclusive on this point if not one soldier had been seen or heard by any residents in Brownsville on the night in question and if nothing were known save the finding of the shells, clips, and bullets.

Fourteen eyewitnesses, namely, Charles R. Chase, Amado Martinez, Mrs. Kate Lealy, Palerno Preciado, Ygnacio Dominguez, Macedonio Ramirez, George W. Rendall, Jose Martinez, J. P. McDonald, F. H. A. Sanborn, Herbert Elkins, Hale Odin, Mrs. Hale Odin, and Judge Parks, testified that they saw the assailants or some of them at varying distances, and that they were negro troops, most of the witnesses giving their testimeny in such shape that there is no possibility of their having been mistaken. Two other witnesses, Joseph Bodin and Genero Padron, saw some of the assailants, and testified that they were soldiers (the only soldiers in the neighborhood being the colored troops). Four other witnesses, namely, S. C. Moore, Doctor Thorn, Charles S. Canada, and Charles A. Hammond, testified to hearing the shooting and hearing the voices of the men who were doing it, and that these were those of negroes, but did not actually see the men who were doing the shooting. About twenty-five other witnesses gave testimony corroborating to a greater or less degree the testimony of those who thus saw the shooters or heard them. The testimony of these eye and ear witnesses would establish beyond all possibility of contradiction the fact that the shooting was committed by ten or fifteen or more of the negro troops from the garrison, and this testimony of theirs would be amply sufficient in itself if not a cartridge or bullet had been found; exactly as the bullets and cartridges that were found would have established the guilt of the troops even had not a single eyewitness seen them or other witness heard them.

The testimony of the witnesses and the position of the bullet holes show that fifteen or twenty of the negro troops gathered inside the fort, and that the first shots fired into the town were fired from within the fort; some of them at least from the upper galleries of the bar-show that affecen on twenty of the negro troops gathered inside the fire shots fired into the town were fired from within the fire fir, some of them at least from the upper galleries of, the barracks.

The testimony further shows that the troops then came out over the walls, some of them perhaps going through the gate, and advanced a distance of 300 yards or thereabouts into the town. During their advance they shot into two hotels and some nine or ten other houses. Three of the private houses into which they fired contained women and children. They deliberately killed Frank Natus, the bartender, shooting him down from a distance of about 15 yards. They shot at a man and woman, Mr. and Mrs. Odin, and their little boy, as they stood in the window of the Miller Hotel, the bullet going less than 2 inches from the head of the woman. They shot down the lieutenant of pollec, who was on horseback, killing his horse and wounding him so that his arm had to be amputated. They attempted to kill the two pollecmen who were his companions, shooting one through the hat. They shot at least eight bullets into the Cowen house, putting out a lighted lamp on the dining-room table. Mrs. Cowen and her five children were in the house; they at once threw themselves prone on the floor and were not hit. They fired into the Starck house, the bullets going through the bullets were sleeping. There was a light in the safe were little children were sleeping. There was a light in the above where little the shooting took place near midnight. The panic caused by the utterly unexpected attack was great. The darkness, of course, increased the confusion. There is conflict of testimony on some of the minor points, but every essential point is established beyond possibility of honest question. The careful examination of Mr. Purdy, Assistant to the Attorney-General, resulted merely in strengthening the reports already made by the Regular Army authorities. The shooting, it appears, occupied about ten minutes, although it may have been some minutes more

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 14, 1907.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the message of the President, which has just been read, together with all of the exhibits, may be printed and lie upon the table, to be called up for consideration and discussion at a later date.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Massachusetts desires to interrupt me, I will yield.

Mr. LODGE. No; not at all.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the message may be printed in the RECORD, though I suppose it will be, as it has been read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message, having been read, will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know how voluminous the papers sent in with the message may be, or whether the depositions which are referred to could properly be printed in the Record.

Mr. FORAKER. I think it would be better to print them as a Senate document.

Mr. LODGE. If they are as voluminous as they seem to be, I think that would be better; but the fact is I know of no place where any information is so thoroughly concealed as in a House or a Senate document. In the Record it usually becomes more or less accessible. But I see that the depositions are too voluminous to go into the RECORD.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Illinois will pardon me a minute to say just a word—— Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will not get started on an extended discussion, as I desire to have the Senate resume the consideration of the legislative, etc., appropriation bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I am not going to make a speech, but I want to make a few remarks, if I may be allowed to do so.

What I want to say, Mr. President, is that this testimony, whatever it may be, whatever it may amount to—and from the President's message we are bound to presume that it amounts to a great deal, as he says it is conclusive-but whatever it may be, whatever it may amount to, it does not remove the objection that I have had to this proceeding from the beginning.

What I have been trying to contend for-and I hope I shall be successful in that—is to secure a hearing for the men who are charged with these serious crimes. This testimony has been taken, as the other testimony was, ex parte, behind closed doors, as the newspapers state, without anybody representing the men most interested to cross-examine or to have a word to say about it. I do not complain of that; but I only call attention to the fact that it has been taken in that way as a reason why I shall not desist, notwithstanding what the President says as to the character of it, from pressing the resolution that I have offered so as to have an investigation of the subject where everybody can be heard, and especially the men who are charged with the crimes of murder and perjury and conspiracy, to the end that if they can establish any fact in their favor they may have an opportunity to do so.

do not propose, even if I were familiar with this testimony, to discuss the case upon its merits at this time or at any time before there has been an investigation, if we shall order one; for I believe in discussing the case after it has been properly made and made in accordance with the spirit of American institutions, after every man, no matter how humble he may be, has had an opportunity to be heard—to have a day in court, if you please. When that time comes I shall have more to say about this particular testimony as well as the other testimony that has so far been adduced, together with such testimony as the committee may take.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The President's message, with the accompanying exhibits and illustrations, will be printed and lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. KEAN, it was Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate document room 500 extra copies of the message of the President relative to the Brownsville affair received this day.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, in pursuance of the notice I gave on Saturday last, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21574) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, there are two or three amendments that I desire to offer on behalf of the committee. On page 11, line 19, after the word "Territories," I move to insert and the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 11, line 19, after the word "Territories," it is proposed to insert "and the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 17, at the end of line 10, I move to strike out the word "page" and insert in lieu thereof the words "stenographer and typewriter."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 17, line 10, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "page" and insert "stenographer and typewriter.'

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 140, after line 24, I move to strike out down to and including line 2 on page 141.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 140, after line 24, it is proposed to strike out:

For rent of suitable buildings for the storage of post-office supplies, and for the rural delivery service, $12,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I believe those are all the amendments the committee desire to have made. When we adjourned on Saturday last the pending question was on the amendment reported by the committee to strike out sections 4 and 5 of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. It is proposed on page 164, after line 121, to strike out the following sections:

SEC. 4. On and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and Vice-President of the United States shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum each.

SEC. 5. On and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of the heads of Executive Departments who are members of the President's Cabinet shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum each.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, during the last session I introduced a bill providing for increased compensation to members of this body and to Representatives and Delegates in the other House. That bill went to the Committee on the Judiciary, where it now is, no report having been made on it. I introduced the bill, Mr. President, because I believed it was a just bill; because I believed the time had arrived when we could properly ask for increased compensation, which, in my judgment, the people and press of the country are satisfied should be granted.

When this bill came from the other House, containing provisions to increase the salaries of certain officials, it was thought by some of us that it would be a proper thing to offer an amendment to the bill covering the bill that I had previously introduced. I will say that that purpose was in contemplation, and the amendment would have been offered not by myself, but by another Senator.

It has this morning come to my attention, Mr. President, that if it should be offered a point of order would be made against it; and as the point of order would undoubtedly lie-and I should have no disposition to engage in a controversy over that matter or to ask for a reversal of the ruling of the Chair, which, I am sure, would be in favor of the point of order-I simply desire to say that, so far as I am concerned, and I think I can speak for others as well, the amendment will not be offered; but some of us will look to legislation along other lines for the purpose of accomplishing what we think ought to be accomplished in this regard.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I regret that the amendment to increase the salaries of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives will not come before the Senate. If the point of order were made against it, it would be undoubtedly sustained.

I am aware of the fact that what I shall say now will be useless so far as present legislation is concerned; but every Senator knows that the salary now paid is inadequate and that it works to the detriment of the Government. There are a number of Senators in this Chamber who are forced to engage in outside business, which interferes with the proper discharge of their duties to the Government and to the Senate. There are a number of Senators here who lecture, and whose minds are thereby more or less diverted from the business of the Government. They can not live on the salary provided by law. I know from experience, being one of the Senators who are compelled to live on their salaries, that it forces that class of men to secure other employment. There are a number of Senators, of course, to whom the salary is a bagatelle; who pay all of their salary to their secretaries, it being only a small portion of their income. But it has come to a pass now that a man of small means must reflect quite seriously whether or not he will accept a position in this great body unless he has money outside of the salary he will receive.

There are a number of very capable lawyers in the different States who, through their practice, are making from three or four to ten thousand dollars a year. They are practicing their profession in fields where there are not great commercial bodies to give them tremendous salaries. If they come here and ac-cept a position in this great body, they lose their practice. If they serve out their six years, on their return to their homes they find that young men have secured their business; and it is a serious proposition with them whether or not, if called upon by the people to occupy a place in this honorable body, in justice to themselves and their families they can accept it.

No one can deny that a Senator can not properly live here on a salary of $5,000 a year. He must keep two homes-one in his State and one here. He is called upon to pay his assessments in political campaigns. He can not avoid it. If he is qualified for a position in this body, he must expend more or less in a social way. He can not take a back room somewhere with his family and do justice to himself and to his constituency.

I regret that at this time the Senate will not incorporate in this bill a provision to increase Congressional salaries, to take effect at a subsequent Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations to strike out sections 4 and 5.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, has the amendment beginning on line 24, on page 32, and ending with line 10, on page 33, been acted upon?

Mr. CULLOM. That has been acted upon, Mr. President.

VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment striking out the matter indicated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] has been agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Wisconsin has any new light on the subject, we shall be glad to hear him when the bill is in conference.

Mr. SPOONER. No, Mr. President; I beg to be excused. I have never gone before a committee of conference to talk about matters of legislation—matters in difference between the two I suppose I can be heard on this amendment in the Houses. Senate: I do not care to spend more than a few minutes

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me, I will make a brief statement.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. In the first place, the amendment was alleged to have been agreed to by the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and the House. We had the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary before the Committee on Appropriations, and the evidence was that the Judiciary Committee had never taken any action whatever on the subject. We thought, under the cir-cumstances, that that statement was entirely incorrect, according to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and that we ought to strike out the provision and find out, if we could, by the time the matter comes before the conference committee, whether there is any ground for the allegation or whether the provision ought to be left in the bill. It proposes to create some permanent bureaus to have charge of indexing the laws of the

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am opposed to the creation of unnecessary bureaus, and I am very strongly of the opinion that, without any detriment to the public interest, some bureaus which are now in existence and which cost a great deal of money could be dispensed with. I think it is true that this proposed index, so far as it has been completed, has not been passed upon by the Judiciary Committee of either House. I do not understand the statement in the House bill which asserts that it has been. I know, so far as the Senate is concerned, it has not. Perhaps it is too broad, because it authorizes the preparation of "such other law indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required for Congress and other official use."

These people have been called upon by the Departments to make digests and to codify the laws of the States and to do some other work of that sort. They have done it, and they have done it well, but it is of a latitudinarian character, and it is that character which seems to be practically given to this work that makes it seem to Senators the foundation of a bureau that is intended to stand.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me? Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I think, Mr. President, it was about the same view that the Senator takes that animated the Committee on Appropriations in dealing with this amendment. It clearly is too broad in its latitude, as the Senator has said, and provides for a permanent bureau, which I do not believe is needed.

The Committee on Appropriations did not have from any source information enough on the subject to formulate an amendment that would cover the case, and it did what has to be done in such cases—disagreed to the whole proposition, leaving it, as it of course will be left, to the committee of conference to see whether the measure can be entirely struck out or can be whipped into shape, so that it will not then give rise to the objection suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin. If the Senator has any amendment which the committee did not have and which it could not devise that would cure it so that it will not need to go to conference, speaking for one of the committee, I will agree with him, but I am free to confess that, as a member of the committee, I did not have information enough to know how it should be framed to relieve it of these difficulties, so as to make it a suitable provision. So the only thing left was to throw it into conference.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I fully agree with the Committee on Appropriations in striking out this paragraph. I believe it should go into conference, and that the members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate should insist upon its remaining out of the bill, and for this reason:

Last year a provision was inserted in one of the appropriation bills providing for the establishment of this corps of employees for the purpose of indexing the statutes of the United States, upon a plan thereafter to be determined. That plan has never been determined. Under the provisions of the act, notwithstanding the fact that there has been no determination of the plan, there has been in operation during the last year, since July 1, a bureau consisting of several clerks, engaged in indexing the statutes of the United States. The provision in the present statutes of the United States. bill seems to indicate a disposition not only to continue the expenditure of the money without authority of law, but to make permanent that expenditure. I therefore hope that the members of the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, when the matter goes into conference, will insist upon their amend-

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the conference committee will not omit an adequate provision, narrowing it so as to eliminate the objection which I myself take to it, for I think they would thereby be doing the public service, and especially the Congressional work, an injury. The statutes of the United States have not been well digested. Congress did provide for a digest of existing statutes, I think at the price of $10,000, was it not? The price was not fixed, I am informed, but that was the sum asked. The work was done and submitted to the Judiciary Committee, I believe, and was examined, prob-ably, by one or two members of the committee. It is in four volumes, as I recollect. I have had occasion to examine that index, and it is worth the money, and it ought to be paid. It is worth the money in this, that it puts into four volumes nothing but the index, the substance, and the references to the statutes of the United States from the beginning; and it is an immense advantage. But I feel bound to say that, so far as I have had occasion to examine it, it is too much a copy of the indices of the various volumes of the statutes.

In the appropriation act of last year is the provision re-ferred to, and I presume my friend the Senator from Wyoming has stated it correctly, and if so he is technically right in the position he takes.

I have looked over this index, so far as it has been prepared, not with the utmost care, but to see how it differs from the present index, and I do not want to do any injustice to it, for I confess its value. It is infinitely preferable to none, and will be found so by every Member of either branch of Congress who has occasion quickly to seek for an accurate reference as to the state of the statute law.

Mr. HALE. Is that the work which in four large volumes has been sent to us?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no; that is the other.

Mr. HALE. That is the other?

Mr. SPOONER. That is the other.

I do not depreciate that, Mr. President. As I said, it is infinitely better than none. But every lawyer and every gentleman who is not a lawyer who has served in either House of Congress knows how important it is to be able quickly and accurately to refer where you will find every item of legislation under one head instead of having a part of the items relating to a subject under one head and another part under a different head, without specific indication as to what is in the one and what is in the other. I think it can be very, very much improved, and I think that Congress ought to pay for the work that has been done on the other, and ought to go on with this. I would limit it to the work that is done by Congress. in favor of making a bureau here to do digesting and indexing for all the Departments of the Government.

I am speaking now only to commend this subject to the conference committee. The Representative from Maine, Mr. Lit-TLEFIELD, has given a good deal of attention to this work. is a very industrious and a very accurate lawyer. He thinks very highly of it, as I do, so far as I have been able to examine it.

Mr. HALE. A good deal, almost everything, in indexing depends on the expert knowledge and experience of the man who does the indexing. The indexing faculty, as everybody who has looked into the subject knows, is a rare and singular faculty. Mr. LODGE. It is a gift.

It is, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, almost a gift. The mere adding together, the mere copying from the index at the end of one volume and putting it into another volume is not much indexing. I'do not know enough about this work that has gone on to know whether the men who have been engaged in it have this rare indexing faculty. Somebody ought to know

Mr. SPOONER. I will say to the Senator from Maine that, in my opinion, the gentleman who is directing this work is admirably qualified for it. I refer to Doctor Scott, who has charge of the law library. I think he is admirably fitted and well trained for it. Of course there are men who must always be under him who have to work under his direction. But the scientific part of it, the arrangement of it, and all that, are done by him. This work is partly done, I think several hundred pages I ran down two or three of the subjects, and I found that it was scientifically done, if I am a judge. I think Congress ought to pay for the other index.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, we on this side of the Chamber are hardly getting the advantage of the Senator's statement, because we can not hear.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I have no criticism whatever to offer upon the work of Doctor Scott or his associates, for two reasons. I would not criticise him, because I understand from those competent to judge that he is well qualified for this work. Again, I would not criticise it because have had no opportunity to examine the work. The criticism I make is that there seems to be, as a result of that work, a disposition to build up a bureau, an independent, permanent bureau, in the absence of any legislative authority; and within the past few weeks, not in this direction, but in others, my duties as a Senator have compelled me to look with a good deal of disfavor upon the operation of bureaus acting independently and without authority of law.

There was inserted in one of the bills of last year a provision enabling the Librarian of Congress to prepare an index of the statutes upon a plan to be approved by two committees of Congress. No plan has ever been submitted to either of those committees of Congress. But the bureau immediately proceeded to organize itself, to have itself put upon the pay roll, to pay itself, and that pay has been going on since the 1st of last July.

Mr. HALE. How could that be done?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Has the Senator that provision in one of the appropriation acts of last session which made this whole matter subject first to the approval of a joint committee?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not the approval of a joint committee, but the approval of the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. HALE. That makes it still stronger. And nothing has been done in the way of approval?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Nothing has been done in the way of approval, nor has anything been done until within the last ten days in the way of submitting any plan to the Judiciary Committee-of this body, at least.

Mr. HALE. It is clearly an illegal and unjustified and inexcusable act.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-Mr. SPOONER. I was not—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.
Mr. TILLMAN. I was so much astonished at the utterance of the Senator from Wyoming that I rose to get some informa-He says that this bureau has organized itself.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well. Mr. TILLMAN. I want to know what has become of our watchdog of the Treasury, who has to pass upon matters of that sort and see whether they are lawful. If anybody can go around and organize a bureau and get by the Comptroller of the Treasury, I should like to know how it is done.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understand the Senator to refer to my friend, Judge Tracewell?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; Judge Tracewell.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not understand that the Comptroller of the Treasury has supervision over the expenditure of that particular money.

Mr. TILLMAN. Who has?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is disbursed by the disbursing officer of the Library of Congress.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Librarian of Congress, then, must be responsible for this bureau.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have given the Senator all the information I have. These people— Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator said this bureau had organized

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What I meant is that these people went upon the pay roll, the money was paid them which it was provided should be done only after certain approval, and the approval was never given. It was done without approval.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if anyone will look at this statement in the bill proposed to be stricken out and consider what the chairman of the Judiciary Committee has said, he will see at once that this paragraph ought to go out. can be no possible question that it ought to be stricken out. It must go out because this is supposed to be a recognition of what has not taken place. I do not know what they are doing in the Library, except by general repute. I understand they are going on and making these indexes. Then somebody else is making an index. It appeared to the committee which had this matter in charge that the only proper thing was to strike out the paragraph and then later determine what ought to be done with reference to the indexes.

I have before me now on the table, as every Senator has, the new code of penal and civil laws, of which an index will have to be made very soon, provided we accept the codification, which we will probably at the next Congress. We can hardly do it at this session. I find on my table a bill introduced by the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton], but I do not suppose the Senator expects to pass this bill during the present session. I hardly think he can.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that the bill which the special joint committee has reported he will observe simply includes all penal, criminal laws; and out of some 9,000 sections in the whole there are included in this bill but 342 or 343 sections. I do hope to get that measure before the Senate and have it enacted at this session. I do not expect, of course, to get the great body of the report of the committee enacted into law at the present session.

Mr. TELLER. In 1897 there was an act passed constituting a commission to codify the penal laws. Two years later, or about two years later, there was passed an act including all civil laws. Now, here is a thorough codification of the statutes of the United States. How good it is I do not know, and I do not suppose anybody else knows. It has only recently come here for our consideration, and nobody would suppose that in the short session of Congress we could do more than is suggested by the senior Senator from Oregon, and I doubt whether we can do that.

I have given a little attention to this codification, and I find there is a disagreement between the commission on some things, and I am pretty sure there will be a disagreement between the commission and some Senators here on some other things. do not believe you can pass all the penal provisions during the present session. I do not believe it is possible to do it.

Mr. President, all the indexing of the statutes as it now exists-and there is a pretty general index, which has answered our purposes for some years-is wasted and will have to be thrown away, because those statutes will be obsolete when these statutes are once adopted. The proper thing for us to do is to strike out this paragraph and meet the question of indexing when we get ready to make the index, which we certainly are not ready to do now. I am opposed to building up, as the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary says he is, this bureau. I think when the time comes for indexing the statutes we can create a special board or committee for the purpose of doing it, and when their work is completed their official functions should terminate. I do not believe it is any business of the Librarian to do this work, and I am astonished that it should ever have been suggested, for I do not believe he is any more qualified to do that than are some members of the Senate. When you come to make an index, you must select somebody whom you know to be capable of indexing. whether there are a dozen Senators in this Chamber, if that business were turned over to them, who would make a very great success of indexing. It requires a man of peculiar knowledge of those things. We do not need an index just now. Let us wait until we do get the statutes enacted into law, which I venture to say will not be done before a year from now. Then let us see if we can not find somebody who can index it better than the last statutes were indexed, which was fairly done, but not as well as it might have been, in my judgment.

There was nothing for the Committee on Appropriations to do but to strike out this paragraph, and we can not deal with it in any other way now. We should discontinue all indexing at the any other way now. present time and defer it until such time as we are ready to have a permanent index for the permanent statutes.

Mr. NELSON obtained the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, as I understand, there is no question before the Senate. I think the Senator from Wisconsin failed to offer any amendment or motion.

Mr. SPOONER. What is that?
Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Wisconsin did not make a motion to reinstate the paragraph?

Mr. SPOONER. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Minnesota. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not wish the Senator to yield.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this paragraph which the committee has proposed to strike out from the bill illustrates how swift men are when you once open the door of the Treasury a little bit to open it wider. I recall what occurred in reference to this matter at the last session, and it is well that the Senate should know it.

Two of our employees in the Senate library had prepared an index, consisting of four volumes, which they submitted to the Judiciary Committee. The Judiciary Committee approved those volumes to the extent of recommending an appropriation of $10,000 to pay for the work. While the matter was pending a gentleman connected with the law library here came and importuned me, and I presume he importuned other Senators. He called my attention to the bad work in that index and suggested that somebody connected with the library be given the work. In consequence of that agitation the paragraph referred to was inserted in the appropriation bill last year, but when it went in I supposed that before any work was done under it they would submit their plan, with an estimate of cost, to the committees of the two Houses of Congress. Nothing of that kind has been done. It seems they have gone to work in some way and organized the bureau, and now they want to perpetuate it and ask for a force of five men to prepare the index.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. They are already using that force,

I will say to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. They are using that force, and under this paragraph they propose to perpetuate it, and then as a part of the scheme add $500 to the salary of the law librarian.

This, it seems to me, is a most dangerous precedent, and I trust that the members of the Committee on Appropriations who will be on the conference will see that this item is ex-cluded from the bill. It has no business in the bill; and what is more, the attention of the Librarian of Congress ought to be called to the fact that he has no right to organize this bureau or to allow any pay to it. They had no right to go to work until they submitted their plan to the Judiciary Committees of the two Houses, and then only after that plan had been accepted and approved. I have never seen anything more lawless in the way of Government work than this matter here. The idea that upon that slender basis they should establish a bureau, and then after establishing it under legislation come here and ask us to perpetuate it with a force of five men-a continuing body-five men there to revise our acts at the end of every session of Congress, it seems to me, is preposterous. I am glad indeed to see that the Committee on Appropriations have had the good sense-and they always have on such items, I am glad to say-to knock this item out, and I hope it will stay out forever and ever.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] has said that he does not think consideration can be given at the present session to the bill which has been reported by the special joint committee embodying the penal laws of the United States. I desire to say to the Senator that while that may be true I trust it is not the attitude of the Senate. There has been no revision of the laws of the United States since 1878, and really not since 1873, for the revision was actually made in 1873 and a partial revision was made thereafter, carrying it up to 1878. The laws of Con-gress at the present time are scattered through something like twenty volumes of the Statutes at Large and Supplements to the Revised Statutes.

Congress in 1897 passed a law authorizing the creation of a commission to codify and revise the laws of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. No; only the penal laws. Mr. FULTON. The penal laws of the United States. In 1899 their duties were enlarged so as to include the judiciary

Then in 1901 their duties were again enlarged, and they title. were charged with the work of codifying and revising all of the permanent and general laws.

Now, the Commission has completed its work and reported to Congress and the work is before Congress. I suppose that work has cost the Government of the United States not less than $200,000. I can not speak positively as to the amount, but the Commissioners were paid $5,000 a year each and there were three of them; they have been at work since 1897; and besides, there were other expenses, for printing and clerical aid, which I doubt not have carried it up to $200,000.

Mr. TELLER. And rent, also. Mr. FULTON. Yes; rent of office, and all that. It does seem to me that the Government should avail itself of the work that has been done at very great expense to the Government, and I may say in passing that I think, taken as a whole, the work is of very great value.

The Congress at the last session appointed a special joint committee to review and examine the work of the Commission. I am a member of that committee, and I know something about the work that the Commission has done, and I know all, I think, about the work that the committee has done. The committee organized and came back here on the 15th day of November last and took up the criminal or penal title as it had been reported by the Commission. We put in every day from the 15th day of November until Congress convened going over the work. took up every section and compared it carefully with the original text. We took up every amendment and compared it. Then during the holiday recess we put in every day at work—
Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Oregon pardon me for a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FULITON. Certainly.
Mr. BACON. The Senator says the committee took up every amendment. What does the Senator mean by that-every amendment proposed by the Commission?

Mr. FULTON. Yes; in the work of revising there were necessarily many amendments inserted in order to correct inaccuracies and develop the meaning. Oftentimes there were two sections on the same subject which had to be brought together, or the logical thing to do was to bring them together, and put them in one section, and frequently new language had to be employed.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to ask the Senator a question.
Mr. FULTON. I shall be glad to have the question asked.
Mr. SPOONER. Has the work of the revisers been confined to consolidating provisions in the interest of accuracy and clear expression, or has the work gone beyond that and changed the spirit, the philosophy, if there is any, of the statutes. In other words, putting it generally, I should like to have the Sena-tor state what liberty the revisers have considered themselves entitled to take.

Mr. FULTON. The revisers have construed the authority given them as an authorization to propose amendments and new legislation without any limit.

Mr. SPOONER. Without any limit? Mr. FULTON. Without any limit.

Mr. FULTON. Without any limit.
Mr. BACON. In other words, I understand from what the Senator says, that they have incorporated or have reported in this revision things which otherwise it would require legislation to put into the law?

Mr. FULTON. Undoubtedly.
Mr. BACON. That is the point I am after. In other words, they have assumed to legislate, if we approve what they have

Mr. FULTON. They have assumed to recommend legislation. In the title which we designate as the penal title they recommended 174 additional sections or new sections. We have reduced that to twenty-three, only thirteen of which are sections defining new offenses, which are offenses that so manifestly should be made criminal, I think, that there will be no question about them.

The Senator from Wisconsin has risen to ask me something further.

Mr. SPOONER. To be a little more precise, I should like the Senator to indicate to us whether the revisers have attempted in any wise to reorganize the present judiciary system of the United States, and if so, in a general way, to what extent and in what manner.

Mr. FULTON. Yes; they have to this extent, although, of course, the Senator understands that that has not been yet re-title, and we still have before us the judiciary title and all

Mr. SPOONER. You have before you the work of the revisers?

Mr. FULTON. Yes. I understand that they have recommended a change of the judiciary system to this extent: They propose to divorce the trial court entirely from the appellate They propose to impose on the district court all original jurisdiction, of course, except such as is vested by the Constitution in the Supreme Court, and to give to the circuit court only appellate duties, making the circuit judges judges solely of the United States circuit court of appeals. Indeed, they propose to change the name of that court to the circuit court and to make it simply an appellate court, and prohibit the judges of the appellate court from doing nisi prius duty at all.

That, in substance, is the change that they recommend in the

Mr. MALLORY. Let me ask the Senator if it is proposed to change their action as judges in civil cases?

Mr. FULTON. In both civil and criminal.
Mr. MALLORY. What right have they under this delegation of power to interfere with the civil action of judges?

Mr. FULTON. The Senator understands that later on the Commission was instructed to revise and codify all the laws, civil and criminal.

Mr. TELLER. That was in 1899. It was in 1899. Mr. FULTON.

Now, whatever may be the view of the Senate touching the wisdom of the change that is proposed by the Commission in regard to the judiciary of the nation, it seems to me that there can be no dispute or no disagreement of opinion touching the importance of the codification of the criminal laws at the

Let me say to the Senate I know this is rather wearisome, but I feel that it is a matter of very great importance. The Government has expended a large amount of money in securing this revision, and if we do not take advantage of it at once it will be useless to attempt to take advantage of it at all, because we are going on and passing new laws and it will have dropped so far in the rear that it will soon cease to have any value.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, this discussion is very interesting, but it is entirely outside of the pending appropriation bill. I hope the Senator will bring his remarks to a close very

Mr. FULTON. I will; but I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that the entire discussion of the morning has been outside of the appropriation bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I think not. Mr. TILLMAN. The indexing was not outside.

Mr. FULTON. The debate on the question was outside, I

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment was before the Senate. Mr. TILLMAN. And we had to ratify it—that is, we had to pass on the Senate amendment.

Mr. FULTON. And all wanted to make speeches of ratifica-

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will conclude his remarks

Mr. FULTON. I do not wish to interfere with the progress of the appropriation bill, and I did not intend to go into this matter so extensively. I only intended to refer briefly to what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] said in his discussion of the amendment. I will, out of deference to the Senator from Illinois

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let me ask the Senator from Oregon a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does not the Senator, who knows more about this question, of course, than anybody else here, regard the indexing, under the appropriation for which all this discussion has arisen, a work of great importance? I can not imagine a subject of any character of such grave importance as the subject of the revision of the laws; and the Senator's remarks are not only entirely pertinent, but highly necessary.

Mr. CULLOM. But it is a consumption of time.

Mr. FULTON. If we are going to have a revision and codification of the laws of the United States, as the Senator from Wisconsin explained a while ago, it is highly important to assemble them under the proper heading. If that is to be done, then, of course, we require a proper index. It seems to me that we ought to determine, first, whether we are going to have the codification and revision, and then, if we are, to have an index made to supply the necessities of the edition. Therefore, the matter of indexing is closely associated with and entirely relevant to the matter of codification and revision.

But I do not wish to take up the time of the Senator from Illinois in the consideration of the appropriation bill. I hope, however, that when it is concluded I may be permitted just a few moments to explain why I deem it important that this bill should be put through at the present session, and then, if the Senate is of a different opinion, we will lay the work aside and make no further attempt in regard to it. But I do not think it is fair to appoint a committee charged with the important work with which this committee has been charged and expect us to go ahead or put them in a place where their duty seems to require them to go ahead and do work of so great importance as this without knowing that the Senate is going to consider it at all. If the Senate is not going to consider it, I wish to be relieved from the work, because it is the most burdensome and difficult task that I ever entered upon in my life.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I dislike to delay the passage of the appropriation bill, but it will be just as effective if passed an hour later as now, and I wish to reply to a few things the Senator from Oregon has said, because he evidently mis-understands my position about this matter.

I agree with the Senator from Oregon that we must as soon as possible enact into law this revision and codification, providing it meets our approval, and if it does not meet our approval as the committee submit it, provided we will have the time, to consider it and make it meet our approval. When I said it was not likely to be brought up, it was not because I had any opposition to taking it up.

Mr. FULTON. I understood the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. We have only about forty days remaining in which to do the business of the session. I believe from measures before us now and measures that will come before us that we are not going to pass the penal provisions at the present session. I wish to say to the Senator that he is in the same position as chairman of his committee that a great many other Work is coming before the Senate chairmen of committees are. that will not be done and will die with the Congress, and the bill the Senator has reported will perhaps die with the Con-

Mr. President, I do not want to criticise the work of the Commission. I have not given such examination to it as that I am willing to criticise it. But I wish to say that the Commission have been exceedingly liberal in their exercise of the authority given them to codify the laws by the changes they have made which I find in a very few pages. I do not think anyone had an idea that they would change the judiciary system of the United States, and I do not believe it ought to be done. I do not believe it will be done in the bill reported by the Senator from Oregon. I think that is a matter which should come from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate or the Judiciary Committee of the House. The Commission propose to transfer the jurisdiction of the circuit courts to the district Possibly that might be a wise thing to do, but if it is ever done the number of judges must be very materially in-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is nothing more than a recommenda-It does not have any effect whatever until we approve it. Mr. TELLER. If we adopt the report as it comes here as a whole, it would be the statute from this hour.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; but I mean to say that as it stands it is nothing more than a recommendation.

Mr. TELLER. They put it in the form of a statute.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. For our convenience.

TELLER. And in their report they suggest that we accept it. There is a great number of things here that they have not suggested in their report. I do not think it is safe to accept this codification unless the committee charged with this work shall go into it page by page and make a report to the Senate, so that the Senate will know every single change proposed in the law and will pass upon it, not simply by the adoption of the whole, but by a special vote determine whether it shall be adopted or rejected.

Mr. FULTON. Will the S Mr. TELLER. Certainly. Will the Senator allow me?

The Senator said the committee should go Mr. FULTON. into the work and examine it page by page. Let me say to the Senator that so far as the work has progressed on the part of the committee they have compared every section and every line.

Mr. TELLER. I have no doubt of that; but you have not gone through the whole of it.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly not; but we expect to do it, if the Senate will give us consideration for the measures as we report However, if the Senate is not going to give us any consideration, if it is not going to take up the work, then we need not go on with it.

Mr. TELLER. Nobody has suggested that the Senate was not going to give it consideration. The Senator is borrowing

Mr. FULTON. But let me say to the Senator I know there is an indisposition to take up this work. I appreciate the feeling that makes Senators indisposed to take it up, because it is difficult and it means long sessions and probably night sessions to give the necessary attention to it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there are provisions in the bill that will go undoubtedly, before we pass on them, to some of the committees; for instance, the Judiciary Committee. I would not be willing myself to vote for any suggestion made by a special committee as to the jurisdiction of the courts or a change in the judiciary system, I will say. That is a matter that I think properly, when we reach it, will be sent to the Judiciary Committee for its opinion. That would be a very proper course, and we show no disrespect to the special committee when we do that. It would be in accordance with what has been done for the last hundred years when we have revised the statutes.

Mr. President, I have called attention to just one point. I can call attention to a dozen here that seem to me to require a good deal of attention. I know nothing about what work the committee have done on the penal statutes. I have very much less interest in those than in the code of the civil law. the committee reported they reported some changes that I have called attention to very briefly.

Mr. Watson was one of the Commissioners. He is a man very well qualified for this work, I want to say, a man whose training and everything fitted him for it. I suppose he agreed with the others, but I am very certain I shall not agree with them as to the judiciary. I think there will have to be some additions made to it. Here it what Mr. Watson says:

I approve the report of the majority of the Commissioners, except in the following particulars:

First. The omission from the revision of section 22 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which reads as follows:

"Sec. 22. Should any State deny or abridge the right of any of the male inhabitants thereof, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, to vote at any election named in the amendment to the Constitution, Article XIV, section 2, except for participation in the rebellion or other crime, the number of Representatives apportioned to such State shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall have to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State."

Mr. President, if that is a sample of what this Commission have done, you may depend upon it that when that bill comes here it will take three months to pass it, and it will take longer than that to pass it in the other House.

I only mention the fact that this codification is not-liable to be immediately enacted into a law, and state as the reason why we should not appoint people to index statutes now existing that they will be superseded largely in a few months. I only read this to show that there is trouble ahead when you come to consider this question. I want to say to the Senator again I do not desire to cast any reflection on his committee. I would not be willing myself to pass upon it if I was a member of the committee without the Senate knowing every single change, and I do not believe the committee will. When you consider that these two great volumes are to be considered here day after day, as they must, you can readily see that we are not likely to do it in this Congress.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I wish to say a word about this revision, and then I shall have finished with it. I do not remember the provision of the appropriation act of last winter, from which it is perfectly clear that so far as the indexing of the statutes is concerned no work was authorized by the act of Congress, except after the preparation of a plan. They were authorized to prepare and present a plan, but they were not authorized to spend a dollar beyond the preparation of a plan until their plan, which means, I suppose, their method of indexing, had been submitted to and been approved by the Judiciary committees of both Houses. That has not been done, and I am frank to say that the work which has been done goes, in my opinion, very far beyond the plan. I know of no other way to meet the requirement of the act, except to make a portion of an index in order that the method employed might be ob-served and criticised; but that would be a matter of small bulk perhaps, whereas a large amount of work has been done

Mr. President, while I am on my feet I trust to be forgiven by the Senator from Illinois, some day, if not now, for saying a word in regard to the subject which has been debated for some time and which confessedly is not before the Senate, and that is the revision of the statutes. There is nothing more important than that. There is nothing that requires finer dis-crimination and larger knowledge of decisions, and, in fact, better ability from almost every standpoint in a lawyer than a revision of the statutes. I have not the slightest doubt-indeed, that the Senators who have laboriously gone over this work during the summer are able, abundantly able. I do not criticise their request, but it is an absolute impossibility for either House of Congress to intelligently enact into law that bulk of proposed new statutes [indicating]. We attempted it some years ago as to the Alaska Code, and it was a farce largely. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] will remember it.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.
Mr. FULTON. What does the Senator think, then, of the advisability of the course to report the matter under the title in smaller sections? We can make it smaller.

Mr. SPOONER. I was going to make a suggestion, which I make because of my appreciation of the value of the work put into actual operation by a board of very able men some years ago. I refer to the revised statutes of Wisconsin. Ex-Senator Vilas was one of the commission; Judge Orton, afterwards chief justice of the supreme court, was another; Judge Taylor, of the supreme court, was another, and they were very able and very industrious men. Others were added. When their bill was introduced, it came with a report, which has always been denominated the "Revisers' Notes," and every section of the statutes, or the proposed statutes, was to be found by number in that book of notes, with a statement whether the section had been rewritten, if rewritten, to what extent, and showing clearly to anyone who had the bill before him as the clerk read at the desk just what the revisers had done with it, so that every member of the legislature, as it went through, could watch it from the standpoint of the report of the revisers. I believe that is the only course which can safely be pursued by the revisers, not the committee. It is not fair to put that burden upon the committee.

Mr. FULTON. I will say to the Senator that I have prepared, and the chairman of the House committee has prepared, just exactly that. I may term it an index. From it I can show exactly every word that is changed-just what is eliminated and just what is inserted—in regard to every section. It is very difficult to publish that without making it so extensive and so voluminous and bulky that it would be almost equal to the code itself.

Mr. SPOONER. It will be of no earthly use to the Members of the Senate and House unless it is published.

Mr. FULTON. Except to call attention to it while the matter is in progress—as the bill is being read—and refer to the statutes as we go along. That is what I expect to do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there further amendments to be proposed to the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. On page 130, line 16, I move to strike out "nine" and insert "ten," and to change the total to correspond with this increase of the appropriation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be read. The Secretary. In line 16, page 130, strike out "nine," before "thousand," and insert "ten;" and in line 17, before "thousand," strike out "eleven" and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

For surveyor-general of Utah, $2,000 ; and for the clerks in his office, $10,000 ; in all, $12,000 .

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Utah desires to have the appropriation raised $1,000, which is, I understand, estimated for, and the committee probably overlooked the fact that it was estimated for. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. On page 131, line 19, I now offer the amendment I gave notice of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On line 19, page 131, it is proposed to strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" so as to read "disbursing clerk, $2,500."

Mr. FORAKER. This was also estimated for, I am informed. Mr. CULLOM. The Senator's friend, whoever he is, is now receiving $2,250 and disburses about a million dollars. bursing officer in the Interior Department receives the same salary and disburses $5,442,000. The disbursing officer in the Navy Department receives the same salary, $2,250; the Auditor for the Post-Office Department receives $2,250, and so on. It seems to me the gentleman whose salary the Senator is trying to increase is getting about as much salary as any of the rest of them and he ought to be content. His salary was increased from $2,000 to $2,250 I think a year ago, possibly two years ago; and I think the Senator had better be content.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, there is nothing personal This is simply a matter of public spirit. I offered the amendment because I think the official who would get the benefit of it is not adequately compensated. I do not know the amount of his disbursements, but I understand that they are very large. The Senator says he disburses only $1,000,000 annually. told that his disbursements are very large, and that he has to give a bond, which costs him a considerable amount. I am further told that as compared with other disbursing officers he is underpaid. I do not know how that is. I am also told that the Department has estimated for this amount and the Postmaster-General has recommended it. It is in view of all that that I have in good faith offered this amendment, not for the purpose of serving the interest of a friend, but because the case appealed to me as one that should be favorably considered.

Mr. CULLOM. I would be very glad to accommodate the Senator, but if we are going to keep these salaries within our control we ought to adhere to what seems to be fair and right as between this man and others who disburse very much more money. There are two or three disbursing officers who receive a salary of $2,400 and disburse $3,200,000, but none of the men who receive so small a salary as $2,250 disburses anything like the amount that is disbursed by those who are getting larger salaries. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I have a small amendment to move, which I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill to accept. On page 147, line 3, after the word "cotton," I move to add the words "and cotton-seed products."

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to accepting the amendment the Senator from Mississippi suggests.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money].

The Secretary. On page 147, at the end of line 3, after the word "cotton," it is proposed to insert "and cotton-seed products."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. On page 86, line 6, I move to strike out the word "two" and insert "three."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 86, line 6, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

One marine engineer, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That necessitates a change of the total in lines 14 and 15, which will be stated.

The Secretary. The total in lines 14 and 15 will then read:

In all, $276,240.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, the communication which I send to the desk from the Quartermaster-General of the United States Army in support of the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the communication will be printed in the RECORD.

The paper referred to is as follows:

[Memorandum for the Secretary of War.]

[Memorandum for the Secretary of War.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,

OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,

Washington, January 8, 1907.

Attention is respectfully invited to an amendment to H. R. 21574, copy inclosed, which proposes to increase the salary of the position of marine engineer of this office from $2,500 to $4,000 per year. Such action would be in the interest of the service, and the favorable consideration of the amendment is therefore recommended and such steps as will further its adoption requested to be taken.

The duties of the marine engineer are highly technical in character, and in business life such a position commands very high pay. This Department now owns and operates ninety-five steamboats, seventeen of which are transports, and many of the others ocean-going, tugs, harbor boats, and torpedo planters, forty of which have been built under the supervision of the present engineer and from plans, designs, working drawings, and specifications prepared by him. He also passes on the necessity for the numerous repairs, and in this capacity is, by the exercise of his judgment and by reason of his long experience and familiarity with the different vessels, enabled to make recommendations which permit of the service being operated in an economical manner.

The present salary is entirely inadequate for the services performed and the responsibilities assumed.

C. F. Humphrey,

C. F. HUMPHREY, Quartermaster-General United States Army.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move an amendment on page 117, line 14, by inserting after the word "thousand" the words "five hundred."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 117, line 14, after the word "thousand," it is proposed to insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

Private secretary, to be selected and appointed by the Commissioner Pensions, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will make necessary a change of the total on page 118, lines 7 and 8.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that that change in the total may be

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the clerks may be authorized to make the correction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will be authorized to make corrections in the totals made necessary by the adoption of amendments.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed:

CODE OF PENAL LAWS.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, in order that I may ascertain the disposition of the Senate in regard to considering at the present session the penal code as it has been reported, I move that it be now taken up and made the unfinished business.

If the Chair will permit me, I will state that the report of the committee shows that all amendments that have been made are printed in italics, that wherever a new section has been created by bringing together two or more sections that section has been printed in brackets, and that where any language has been omitted the section has been printed in brackets, so that it will be easy to discover by simply looking at the bill as reported what changes or amendments have been made.

I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in going into any further explanation in regard to this measure, the importance of which the Senate understands just as fully as I do, and understand it without my making any further suggestion.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton], as the Chair understood, requested permission of the Senate to make his statement, and the Chair heard no objection. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, a similar proposition was made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton] a day or two ago, to make the bill to which he refers the unfinished business, and objection was then made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows], who is not now in his seat. I do not think this agreement ought to be made in the absence of that Sen-

Mr. FULTON. I am not asking for unanimous consent. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has moved to take up the bill.

Mr. BERRY. I thought he was asking for unanimous con-

Mr. FULTON. No; I was not asking for unanimous conent. I simply moved to take up the bill. I was premising—
Mr. KEAN. Mr. President—
Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator kindly indicate what he wants?

Mr. KEAN. I want the motion put and decided, and the bill made the unfinished business.

Mr. BERRY. The question is not debatable. Mr. FUL/TON. Very well, I simply renew my Very well, I simply renew my motion that the bill to which I have referred be taken up and made the unfinished business.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon moves that the bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend penal laws of the United States be made the unfinished business.

Mr. ALDRICH. Taken up for consideration, it should be. The VICE-PRESIDENT. That the bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. NELSON. I make the point of order that it is not in order to enter a motion to make the bill the unfinished business. That can only be done by unanimous consent; but the Senator can move to take up the bill.

Mr. FULTON. I simply move to take up the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, the bill having been taken up, now ask that it may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made. Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, would it be in order at this time to offer a resolution for reference?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be received. Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator that I think we had better go on with the consideration of the resolution in relation to the Brownsville affair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I understand that the unfinished business has been temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business has been temporarily laid aside.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire, then, Mr. President, that the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] in regard to the investigation at Brownsville may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] on December 20, 1906, as modified, which will be

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and hereby is, authorized to take such further testimony as may be necessary to establish the facts connected with the discharge of members of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, and that it be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report thereon, by bill or otherwise.

The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is further authorized, if deemed necessary, to visit Brownsville, Tex., inspect the locality of the recent disturbance, and examine witnesses there.

Mr. Mallody obtained the floor

Mr. MALLORY obtained the floor. Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FORAKER. May I inquire if the Senator from Florida rises to speak to the resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] has asked that the resolution introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] should be laid before the Senate. Mr. FORAKER. Very well. Does the Senator desire to speak to the resolution, may I inquire?

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to make a few remarks concerning

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I doubt whether if this resolution is adopted it will lead to any practical result. The question as to whether the attack on the sleeping community of Brownsville was made by soldiers of the garrison at Brownsville is, I think, no longer an open question. While it is true that we have had very little sworn testimony on the subject-in fact, very little testimony in the legal sense of the term-we nevertheless have before us an array of facts, furnished by credible witnesses, together with a number of circumstances which, in my judgment, if the question of the guilt of some of the men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry at Brownsville were submitted to a jury in any State of the Union would lead to nothing else than a verdict of guilty. There can, Mr. President, be no reasonable doubt in the mind of any impartial and intelligent man of the fact that the "shooting up" of that town about midnight on the 13th day of last August was done by negro soldiers, members of the Twenty-fifth Infantry.

We have, Mr. President, without adverting to the testimony before the grand jury at Brownsville, which was under oath, and without referring to additional alleged evidence that is brought here to-day with the President's message, we have before us the statements of at least six eyewitnesses, men living in Brownsville, against whose reputations not one word has been offered, whose condition was such that the idea of collusion is excluded and who testify point-blank that they saw the men who did the shooting, at the time they did the shooting, and that those men were soldiers, and negro soldiers. The only negro soldiers then within a hundred miles of Brownsville were the members of the Twenty-fifth Infantry quartered in barracks in the fort in that town.

In addition, Mr. President, to that direct testimony, the statement of these six witnesses, we have the circumstantial evidence that has been adverted to this morning in the President's message, which is before us, presented in document known as Senate Document No. 155. It is that there were found upon the ground on the day after this occurrence cartridges and parts of cartridges that belonged to the peculiar gun with which the Twenty-fifth Infantry were armed; that there were clips found on the ground where the shooting occurred, which could be used only in guns such as were used by the Twenty-fifth Infantry; that there were bullet marks upon houses bearing a course so straight and direct from the quarters of the Twenty-fifth Infantry that it can not be contended they were not fired either from the fort or from a position on the opposite side of the fort, and even one bullet, as has been testified to, passed through the second story of a house situated very close to the wall of the fort at such an angle that it necessarily must have been fired from the second story of the barracks in which Company "C" of that regiment were quartered.

I do not propose to go into the testimony, but, in addition, we have the motive inspired by the treatment which the men of this battalion suffered at the hands of the people of Brownsville. There was discrimination against them. There had been individual collisions between members of that battalion and the citizens of Brownsville. One negro soldier was charged with having attempted an assault upon a respectable lady of that The liberty of the soldiers had been curtailed in consequence of the complaint arising from that assault, so that they were required to be in their quarters by 8 o'clock at night. liberty was allowed them beyond that hour. They felt themselves insulted, undoubtedly, by reason of the discrimination shown against them in the barrooms in Brownsville, where they were segregated and required to drink by themselves. Resentment against such treatment and a disposition to revenge themselves for it would not be unnatural. Even white men subjected to the treatment which they had sustained would certainly have entertained resentment against those who had imposed it on them. Therefore, I say that, in addition to the direct testimony, in addition to the circumstantial evidence, you have the motive supplied by the resentment naturally felt by these men against the individuals at whose hands they had suffered what they believed to be great injustice.

It is true that, in answer to all of that, we have the sworn statement of every man in the battalion to the effect that he knew nothing whatever about this occurrence, and that he never had heard any expressions of resentment or of hostility toward the white people of Brownsville uttered by any members of the That seems to have been the uniform statement of battalion. the men who were examined subsequently at Fort Reno by an official of the Government. But notwithstanding those assertions it is not reasonable, Mr. President, to believe that in a body of men like that, after undergoing the treatment which they sustained, there would not be a deep feeling of hostility, resentment, and hatred toward those who had subjected them to it.

On that point I will call attention to the way in which this matter has struck other colored people. I have in mind here a set of resolutions, or a pronunciamento, purporting to be put forth by the colored citizens of Boston and vicinity in mass meeting, assembled in Faneuil Hall, protesting against the action of the President in this case. In the course of their exposition of the reasons for their protests we have this:

Brooding on repeated insults and outrages, a few of these colored soldiers went into the town on the night of August 13 last with their guns, determined to do for themselves what the uniform of their country could not do for them and what the police power of white Brownsville would not do for them, viz, protect them from such insults and outrages and punish at the same time the authors of their misery.

It would seem, Mr. President, that these highly enlightened and cultured colored people of Boston had no question in their minds that there was ample ground for the most bitter resentment, and not only no question in their minds that there was such ground for resentment, but that they had no question in their minds that the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Regiment fired those shots on that night.

In passing, though it is not exactly pertinent to the point which I am endeavoring to make here, I would call attention to the language in which the President is criticised in this pronunciamento or protest. I will read an extract from it:

But when the blow which ought to have fallen on the guilty ones, and on them alone, has fallen with crushing weight on scores of innocent men, whose only offense is that they refused to do the infamous work of spies and informers on comrades, we do utter our word of appeal and protest to the country against this act of unprecedented injustice and wanton abuse of Executive power on the part of President Roosevelt.

Mr. President, if there were wanted any better evidence than we already have as to the incompetency of the average colored man in this country to grapple with great questions, we could get no better piece of testimony than that which is presented by this protest. The present President of the United States, of all the Presidents who have sat in that chair since the close of our civil war, has manifested more plainly and decidedly a disposition to lift up and encourage the colored race in this country, as far as in his power lay, by elevating them, on all occasions when he could do so, to positions of honor and trust under the

I myself think he was mistaken. I protested at the time against the number of those appointments, because I thought it was impolitic and out of time; but he did it. The collector of internal revenue of my State—the most lucrative office, if I am not mistaken, under the Federal Government in Florida—is a full-blooded colored man. If I am not mistaken, the collector of customs at Savannah, Ga., another white community that pro-tests against putting negro officials in high office, is a colored man. If I am not mistaken—and if I am the Senator from Georgia can correct me—the collector of internal revenue of the State of Georgia is now a colored man. We all know what a struggle was made here against the confirmation of Doctor Crum as collector of customs at Charleston, S. C., and how, in spite of the protests of Senators on this floor and Representatives of the South in the other House, the President insisted on doing what he apparently believed to be his duty in this matter of upholding and uplifting the colored race by giving them offi-

But these patriots in Boston, who probably are the best representatives of the colored race in the country, who as a class are the most enlightened and probably the most highly educated colored people in the world, allow themselves to be carried away by the passion of the moment, and, unable to look fairly and squarely at a proposition which should be judged calmly and justly, forget the fact that they are under great obligations to the President and proclaim to the world their inflammatory denunciation of the best friend they have ever had in that

I wish to be understood, Mr. President, as not agreeing with the President of the United States in all he has done in this respect, but I refer to this incident as an illustration of the incompetency of even the very best element of the colored people to grapple with grave questions of this character; because it is a grave question, a most serious one. While it is one that is not at all difficult to dispose of justly and rightly, it is one, nevertheless, which is of great importance, and it should be considered very carefully before we give expression to our opinion concerning it.

But I digressed, Mr. President, from the line I was pursuing merely to call attention to this phenomenon or peculiarity of our colored people, who will allow passion to get the better of their judgment on almost all important occasions in which they think their race is concerned.

In addition, Mr. President, to these indicia of the truth of the fact that this assault at Brownsville was made by colored soldiers in garrison there, we have the serious and unanimous conclusion of disinterested and capable men on the ground. Take General Nettleton, as an illustration. He had no motive whatever in adopting a theory which was not well sustained. all have read his letter on this subject. General Garlington and Major Blocksom, officials sent there for the purpose of ascertaining the truth, unhesitatingly express the conviction that some of the men of this Twenty-fifth Infantry, at least, were the ones who committed the assault at Brownsville. Attention is called by one of these gentleman-I think by General Garlington-to the fact that when the sound to arms was given, when the bugle blew, and the men who were sleeping in the barracks, in response to that call went to get their arms, it was found that one of the racks containing the arms for Company C had been broken open; and to this day, Mr. President, we do not know when or how it was broken open. The sergeant who gave testimony on that subject did say something to the effect that he believed it was broken open by the men who had gone there after the call to arms and who, knowing it was their duty to take their arms, and unable in the dark to get the door open. broke it open. That is merely a surmise. It is a crucial point in the matter of investigating this question, because without those guns the soldiers could not have made the attack, and it devolves upon them to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the rack was opened as that sergeant surmised it had been. But we have no evidence of it.

It is perfectly consistent with all the other facts that that rack was broken open fifteen or twenty minutes or a half hour or an hour before the call to arms was given; that the men who did the shooting got the guns out of the rack so broken open, because, if I am not mistaken, those racks contained each one-quarter of the guns of the company, numbering in this instance sixteen or seventeen guns; that they went out, did their devilish work of murder, and got back in time to answer to their names with their guns in their hands and escaped detection, because all the others by that time had gotten their guns, and it was impossible to discriminate between those who had guns that had been outside of the walls and those who had taken guns in response to the call.

Therefore, I take it, after this somewhat hurried review of the bulk of the testimony, that it is really unnecessary for the Senate to designate a committee to search further to ascertain whether this assault was made by members of any company of that battalion. If the committee does investigate, it will be impossible for it to ascertain anything more than that fact. I do not think it is within the range of probability that the committee will be able to ascertain who were the individual soldiers who were concerned in that riot. The grand jury of that county failed to elicit one syllable of evidence implicating any individual. The officers of the Army who were sent down there have failed utterly to do so. But it is suggested that a committee of the Senate may go down there and possibly ascertain who these individuals were. I do not think that is the duty of a committee of this body. However, I do not say definitively that I shall vote against the resolution. I am in favor of throwing upon this subject all the light that can possibly be obtained, and it is within the range of possibility that some evidence may be obtained to designate and point out distinctly who the culprits were in this particular case.

Mr. President, proceeding on the theory and premise that this assault was made by members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment stationed at Brownsville, I shall advert as briefly as possible to what I regard as the real question presented from a legal point of view by this case. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the eloquent Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], who on several occasions has given us his views upon the action of the President. Invariably the Senator from Ohio has contended, as these protestants from Boston contend, that a great injustice has been done these men; that they have been charged with crimes, and that it lies at the very foundation of our institutions that a man who is charged with a crime shall have the right to meet his accuser and to submit questions to that accuser. The Senator from Ohio and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] both have favored the Senate with their opinion of the President's action viewed from that position.

But, Mr. President, it occurs to me that in this case these men are not charged with anything. The whole battalion practically has been discharged, but I challenge the Senator from Ohio or the Senator from South Carolina to indicate any instance in which a charge is now made against any individual of that battalion. It is true there was a charge formulated against thirteen who were suspected and held in confinement, but because of the absence of evidence, because of the conviction on the part of the officer in command that it was utterly impossible for any proof to be made to convict any one of them, those charges were dismissed and the men were discharged from the Army without any charge of crime being preferred against any one of them.

If that is so, then, Mr. President, if they were discharged without any accusation of crime against them personally and individually, where is the wrong in their being discharged without trial, if the President had the power to so discharge them? I have been unable to see it, because I think it will be admitted, even by the Senator from Ohio, that the President has been vested by Congress, if he has not the power inherent in his position as Commander in Chief, with the right and the power at all times, in war or in peace, to discharge an enlisted man from

Conceding that the President has the right to discharge a man from the Army in accordance with the provisions of the fourth article of war, and that no charges have been preferred against any individual among these men who have thus been discharged, the argument of the Senator from Ohio goes a step further and says that may be true, but we have rules and regulations of the Army, which rules and regulations have the sanctity of law, and those rules and regulations prescribe what shall be done when men are discharged under the circumstances that exist in this case.

I will say here, Mr. President, that, in my opinion, the President had no right or authority, in the discharge that he gave to these men, classified as it is, "without honor," to prohibit their employment thereafter in the civil service of the United States. In his message to the Senate to-day I am glad to see that he recognizes that to be the fact—that he exceeded his authority in making that declaration-and withdraws it. I go further. I do not believe that the President of the United States, from the view which I take of this law, has the right to prohibit the reen-listment of these men in the Army; not that the President could not to-morrow, under the authority vested in him to make rules and regulations, prescribe a rule whereby they could be excluded; not that for the future he could not act on such a rule, but at the time when he acted there was no power that I know of, vested in him under the rules which he had himself established authorizing him to exclude from reenlistment.

The regulation requires that when a man is discharged his character as a soldier shall be incorporated in the discharge, and that it shall be at least "good." When the President came to discharge these individuals, admitting, as he did, that he could obtain no evidence against their conduct, how could he say, in the case of a man whose record had been good, that it was not good, simply because the soldier happened to be a member of the Twenty-fifth Infantry? For that reason, although I am not prepared to say positively that I think the President has exceeded his authority in that instance, to my mind it looks very much as if it would be difficult for him to sustain his action on that point.

As I have already said, the President to-morrow might prescribe another rule or regulation and declare that there should be no reculistment in any case when in the judgment of the President it was for the good of the service that a man should not be reenlisted. I think there can be no question that the President would have the authority to make that regulation and enforce it, and undoubtedly he might do it now in this case, but it would be an ex post facto proceeding which I do not think would be becoming under the circumstances. But, Mr. President, the President of the United States had the right to discharge the men; they have been discharged; and it is for him to say hereafter whether or not they shall remain out of the Army.

The Senator from Ohio, in his very able speech, called attention to paragraph 146 of the regulations, and he claims with much force that paragraph 146 is intended to apply to soldiers discharged under the circumstances that existed in this case prior to the expiration of their terms. If the Senator can demonstrate that, he will undoubtedly show that the President has been inconsistent in his action in this matter. However, we have nothing but the assertion of the Senator from Ohio to the effect that this peculiar kind of a discharge referred to in the one hundred and forty-sixth paragraph is a discharge covering cases where the soldier has not filled out his term. other hand, we have the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army saying most unequivocally that the kind of a discharge referred to in paragraph 146 applies exclusively to the case of a soldier whose term has expired.

He says:

Paragraph 146 of the Army Regulations contains certain provisions which, if carefully read, will be found to be in entire harmony with the requirements of paragraph 148, above cited.

Paragraph 146 applies exclusively to the case of a discharge at expiration of the soldier's term of enlistment and to the form of discharge which shall be used in that case, and provides—

After reciting paragraph 146 he again asserts:

As has been said, the requirements of the paragraph last above cited are only applicable in determining the character of discharge to be given an enlisted man at the expiration of his term of enlistment. It has never been regarded as restricting the authority vested in the President and the Secretary of War in the fourth article of war.

It may be possible that there are some gentlemen here present who do not know what paragraph 146 prescribes. For them I will say, without stopping to read it, that it requires that whenever a man is to be discharged without honor notice shall be given thirty days before the discharge takes effect by his commanding officer summoning together a board of officers who shall consider the question whether there is sufficient ground to discharge him without honor, and that he can not thereafter be discharged without honor if the judgment of the board is against such discharge. That is paragraph 146 briefly stated.

The Senator from Ohio in order to sustain his case says that paragraph 146-not one of the laws of the land, but one of the regulations established by the President-means that at any time when a man is to be discharged from the Army without honor he must, not by his own volition, not at his own wish or request, but by a positive requirement which can not be avoided, be brought before a board, and that board shall have an opportunity to inquire as to the causes of the proposed discharge without honor.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio goes further, and says that that being so, if it is the fact, if it has the efficacy and force of a law, in these cases it was not observed and great in-justice has been done to the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry who were so discharged. Against this I present the context of the paragraph, together with the interpretation put upon it uniformly from the time the rule was promulgated by the President to the present day. We have it from the Judge-Advocate-General that it has been invariably and exclusively applied in the cases of soldiers who were discharged without honor at the expiration of their term, and that in no instance-at least that is the conclusion-has it ever been thought to be applicable to the case of a soldier discharged prior to the expiration of his If that is so; if we are to accept the interpretation put upon it by the Executive, who framed it, and his legal advisers for the past thirteen years, instead of the interpretation now put upon it by the Senator from Ohio, there is no ground left, it seems to me, Mr. President, upon which the Senator from Ohio can protest. Clearly, if the Judge-Advocate-General is correct in his statement that paragraph 146 applies exclusively to cases where a man is discharged at the end of his enlistment, then it has no application to this case, and no one can charge the President with injustice or wrong because he discharged these soldiers without submitting their claim to a board, as required under the one hundred and forty-sixth paragraph of the Army Regulations. Can it be doubted that the President's construction of the purpose of that regulation was correct and that the Senator from Ohio is wrong?

Passing, I call attention to the fact that we have before us the statement that there were some 352 discharges without honor given last year, and the Senator from Ohio approves, to some extent at least, if I properly interpret his remarks, of some of those discharges. In no instance was the formality required by paragraph 146 observed. The Senator from Ohio savs:

Now, in what kind of a case? The Senator called our attention to the fact that the President's message discloses by one of its exhibits that during the past year 352 discharges from the Army were granted without benor, and he talks as though of necessity, if what I am contending for could be sustained, every one of them would be invalid and an undue exercise, a usurpatory exercise, of power. Not at all. I think the discharge without honor is proper enough in a proper case, in such a case as it was intended for; and what kind of a case was it intended for?

The Senator from Ohio then goes on and tells us:

The Senator from Ohio then goes on and tells us:

As I said the other day in speaking, if I had the list before me I would have numerous illustrations suggested to my mind immediately. But the illustration I gave then was of a boy seeking to enlist and succeeding in enlisting by misrepresenting his age. He serves a few months. His mother comes and finds him. He is homesick, He has imposed upon the enlisting officers. His enlistment was not honest. He is not entitled to that certificate of an honorable discharge which should be given only to a man who has rendered faithful and honest service, to employ the language used in the statute. Therefore they say, "The boy is doing no good. It is a case of hardship. He wants to be discharged. We will discharge him;" and the Secretary of War or the President, as the case may be, orders that he be discharged without honor; that his connection with the service be terminated, not in the way of punishment, but in the way of favor to him.

But. Mr. President, the statute of the United States makes

But, Mr. President, the statute of the United States makes that an offense punishable by court-martial. Under the sixtysecond article of war a court-martial may take cognizance of it. I call the Senator's attention to page 945 of West's Compilation, which declares under the act of July 27, 1892:

Fraudulent enlistment, and the receipt of any pay or allowance thereunder, is hereby declared a military offense and made punishable by court-martial under the sixty-second article of war.

The Senator in his speech the other day approved of the discharge without honor in the case of a boy who under that provision of law is required to be tried by a court-martial, not necessarily to the exclusion of his discharge by the President, but who may be court-martialed for a military offense if such an offense is found to exist in his case. Yet the Senator has no accusation to bring against the War Department because in the 352 cases of discharges without honor, of which undoubtedly a great many were cases of this character, there was no board of officers summoned to make investigation as to the correctness of the charge, and the man was allowed to go upon being discharged without honor with no protest or complaint on the part of anyone. The same way with regard to descrition. Descrition is an offense cognizable under a court-martial. Yet among these 352 who were discharged during the last year were a number of men who were discharged for the crime of desertion, and they were discharged without honor. There was no board summoned to inquire as to the correctness of that accusation, and the men were allowed to go with the words "without honor" put upon the certificate which they carried.

Mr. President, it strikes me that the two points which I have endeavored to bring to the attention of the Senate are the only two points left in this discussion. In the first place, we must bear in mind the fact that there is no charge of crime against any one of these discharged men. Of the whole number, some one hundred and sixty-odd, who were discharged there is not a single one against whom any crime has been charged. They get their certificates of discharge simply with the inscription "with-out honor" and are sent out of the Army. How can it be said that these cases differ in any particular from the case of the ordinary man who before the expiration of his term is discharged without honor and concerning whom no complaint whatever has ever been made?

Then, if that is so, as I have undertaken to show, the only question remaining is whether the President should not have summoned a board under the one hundred and forty-sixth paragraph of the Regulations of the Army to determine whether or not these men could be properly discharged without honor. that regulation was intended, as I have said, to apply to the case of a man dismissed from the Army during his term, before its limit had expired, undoubtedly the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from South Carolina are more or less correct in their criticism. But it is a fact, as the Judge-Advocate-General has undertaken to show-and we have to go by the testimony of those who are construing and interpreting this regulation—that during the whole time of its existence it never has been applied to any other case than that of a man who was discharged at the expiration of his term. Then I fail to see in any particular how it can be said that the Executive in ordering these dis-charges without honor has infringed upon the right of any individual.

That being so, and submitting those views as briefly as I can, I have no hesitation in saying in conclusion that if an investigation is to be had, if the Senate sends its committee to Brownsville, they will find that the assault was made by soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry on the night of the 13th of last August, that those men were discharged from the Army under and by virtue of authority possessed by the President, and that it was not only within his authority, but it was his plain duty to do so. Had he failed to do so he would have knowingly retained in the service of the country, to the great detriment of the Army, some very brutal and very desperate cutthroats.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I had not intended discussing the pending resolution at all, but after the remarks which were made on the floor of the Senate last Saturday I felt like I ought to occupy a few minutes of the time of the Senate. The junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson], not intentionally, did my State—and I believe he did other Southern States—an in-justice. I am frank to say that the white people of Georgia believe that the negroes ought never to have been enfranchised. There are those who believe that they ought to be disfranchised There are others who believe that those who are intelligent, honest, and industrious ought not to be disfranchised, and that the vicious and the ignorant ought to be disfranchised. But, Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado said that the leading public men of the South were in favor of mob law, in favor of lynch law, and regarded the law as a farce and a fraud.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly; with pleasure. Mr. PATTERSON. With a purpose not to interrupt the Senator again in his remarks, no matter what he may say, I want to declare now, at the very outset, that the Senator from Colorado made no such sweeping statement as the Senator from Georgia charges him with making. I will content myself with that statement, and if what the Senator from Georgia may say shall seem to require a reply I will say something further when the time to reply comes.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator did not intend to make a wholesale charge, but I believe that when we carefully examine the RECORD we will find that the Senator did say that the leading public men of the South were in favor of mob violence and were not willing to trust the trial of cases to the courts. The Senator did not specify a single public man from the South, except one, when I asked him to do so.

I think I have been familiar with the conditions of affairs in Georgia for more than a quarter of a century, and as I have just said, there is a division of public sentiment in Georgia in regard to the disfranchisement of the negro. I think the majority of the white people of my State believe that the negroes ought to be disfranchised. There are those who believe that the ignorant and vicious ought to be disfranchised; probably the entire white population of the State agree on the latter proposition; I am sure there is no division of sentiment that it was a mistake to bestow enfranchisement on this race, immediately after the civil war, when the negro had never had the slightest opportunity to prepare himself for the exercise of this privilege. It is amazing to me that the people of the South have been able to deal so wisely with the most serious problem that ever confronted any people. I do not care now to discuss the task they had before them and to point out how well they have succeeded in solving the same; such discussion would be foreign to the resolution now pending.

No other section of the country has had to deal with such a problem, and the whole nation was responsible for its solution, and the South should have had the sympathy and aid of every section of the country in bringing about a proper solution of this problem. Lynchings and mob law have occurred in almost every State in the Union; I do not condemn the whole people of the States where it occurred, but I give credit to the intelligent and thoughtful people who threw their influence against mob violence and in favor of the enforcement of the law. Any man who attacks any State in this Union makes an assault upon the Republic and is an enemy to his country. I will not precipitate on the floor of the Senate any discussion that will revive the prejudices and passions growing out of the civil war. The good people of the country are glad to see all sections united. Each should rejoice in the prosperity of the other and deplore any misfortunes that may occur in any section of the country.

I repeat, I will not discuss the race question.

I will not discuss the issues growing out of the civil war, but sometime in the future I may discuss at length the relation between the two races in the South and point out to the country the treatment the negro has had at the hands especially of the people of Georgia, and I dare say that the general course of the white people of the State, in their dealings with the black man, deserves praise instead of censure at the hands of the entire country. I repeat there may be difference of opinion in regard to total disfranchisement, but there is no division of sentiment when it comes to guaranteeing to the black man the equal protection of the law. They have been secure in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property, and no man would deprive a negro of a fair and impartial trial of the courts. The law makes no distinction in the protection of the life, liberty, and property of the citizen. I have never known any public man in my State to advocate mob violence, and to denounce trial by the courts as a farce and fraud, and to advise the people to mob violence. There is quite a distinction between disfranchisement and mob The governor-elect in my State, Hon. Hoke Smith, has been mentioned in this debate. I have known him for a quarter of a century. I was not in Georgia during the gubernatorial campaign, or until near its close, but I am absolutely sure that never at any stage did either of the candidates advocate mob law. To my certain knowledge Mr. Smith has boldly and fearlessly, by every act of his life, opposed mob violence. This was not one of the issues of the campaign. He did advocate disfranchisement, but when the Atlanta mob occurred I am sure that he lent the weight of his influence to in every possible way suppress it, and has always been a strong advocate of the enforcement of the law.

He did contend that the disfranchisement of the ignorant blacks was necessary to the preservation of our institutions, but never did Mr. Smith or any other candidate for governor in my State, so far as I know, declare in favor of mob violence, or in favor of denying to the colored man the protection of his life, liberty, and property in the courts. I never heard any public man in Georgia lift his voice in favor of mob violence. I do not believe that any man could win in a political campaign who was not willing to give a fair and impartial trial to all citizens in the courts.

It is true that in the city of Atlanta we had an unfortunate mob that gave no little trouble, but I am glad to say that every good man, every intelligent and upright man in the city of Atlanta was opposed to the spirit of the mob; and the governor, the officials of the State, the good people of the city of Atlanta, rose up man to man to enforce the law. Many of these rioters have been convicted and sent to the penitentiary, and more of them are under indictment and will doubtless be convicted.

I do not believe that there is an intelligent man in Georgia who is not in favor of giving every man in the courts, whether he be white or black, whether he be rich or poor, a fair and impartial trial, and in protecting every citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. I note with keen interest and great appreciation the remarks of the Senator, for I know how earnest he is and how faithful he is as a law-abiding citizen and in all the relations of life. I dislike to break into him with such an inquiry as I want to make, but, in view of his statement, I wish to ask him if it is not true that one of the leading newspapers of Atlanta for quite a time during the campaign—perhaps it was last year—carried in its columns an open offer of a reward of $1,000 for somebody who would produce a lynching like that which had occurred in South Carolina, or something to that effect.

Mr. CLAY. I am not aware of any such publication. If so, it escaped my mind. I will say, however, that those sentiments would not be approved by the good people of my State.

I did not rise, however, Mr. President, for the purpose of discussing race issues. I am frank to say that I do not believe any good has come from either the discussion or the introduction of the pending resolution. I fear more harm has come from its discussion than good.

I did not rise for the purpose of discussing disfranchisement. But it is true that nearly every State in this Union has re-stricted suffrage, and each State must judge for itself of the conditions in those States.

Massachusetts has an educational qualification for voters which has disfranchised thousands of her citizens; she found it necessary to do so to protect the good against the bad; she knew her population better than the other States did, and she should be allowed to manage her own affairs without any interference from other States or the Federal Government.

There is a provision in the constitution of the State of Ohio that no citizen except white citizens shall vote in that State. If I remember correctly, two efforts were made in the State of Ohio to strike from the constitution of that State "white citizens," and the people voted it down.

Mr. FORAKER rose.

Mr. CLAY. I may be mistaken, but that I understand to be the fact.

Mr. FORAKER. They finally amended the constitution in that respect. So there is no such limitation in the constitution

No. It was inserted in the constitution, and if the Senator will turn to the constitution, and he is familiar with it, he will find, of course, that after the adoption of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments that provision of the State constitution became null and void. But there was an election held in Ohio, and the majority of the people voted against striking it out.

Mr. FORAKER. That is all true, Mr. President. That constitution was made by the Democratic party.

Mr. CLAY. And the Republican party refused time and again to vote it out.

Mr. FORAKER. We did not have votes enough then.

have got enough now.

Mr. CLAY. I apprehend that you would never have votes enough in Ohio if it were left to a popular vote of the State.

Mr. President, as I said, take the great State of Massachu-I understand she has an educational and a property qualification for voters.

Mr. LODGE. There is no property qualification.
Mr. CLAY. She has an educational qualification.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it has been there for more than fifty

Mr. CLAY. Vermont is one of the great States in this Union, always represented by conservative men, and so is Massachusetts. Vermont has a provision in her constitution that no one can vote until he shall have the approval of the civil board in his town.

We had just as well deal with the question fairly. all of the States the ignorant, indolent, and the vicious have The intelligent, the thoughtful, and the been denied suffrage. patriotic have found such course to be necessary to preserve the institutions of the State. In California the Chinaman is not permitted to vote. If the Constitution was enforced, Mormons would not be entitled to vote in Idaho. The race feeling in California, Oregon, and many Western States is as intense as it is in the South. I doubt if the southern whites have ever entertained a feeling so bitter as the people of the Pacific States entertain toward Japanese and Chinamen. We have seen evidence of this fact but recently displayed by the good people of California relative to the admission of Japanese children into the public schools. Strange to say, many of the States that have never been confronted by these problems and can not appreclate the danger of the race antipathy, want to become the guardians of the States that have dealt immediately and directly with these problems since the civil war. I repeat, it is wise to let each State regulate the question of suffrage, trusting to the honor and intelligence of the people to so regulate their internal affairs as not to do injustice to anyone. Georgia ought not attempt to dictate to Maine, Massachusetts, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, or any other State in the Union as to what kind of constitutions those States shall form regulating the elective franchise. Different conditions exist in different States, and these different conditions must be met necessarily by constitutions and laws applicable to local conditions.

The people of the South do not desire to oppress the colored man if he is honest, industrious, and thrifty, and tries to make a good citizen. The white people, while not believing in social equality, sympathize with him, assist him in educating his children, and encourage him in every way possible. In justice to the colored race, we have hundreds and thousands of thrifty, industrious, and worthy negroes who enjoy the confidence and who possess the friendship of the white people of my State. can extend such friendship without believing in social equality.

As I said, I did not rise for the purpose, however, of discussing the race question. I have never discussed it in my life, and I never want to monopolize a subject that belongs exclusively to my good friend from South Carolina [Mr. Till-MAN]. [Laughter.] Consequently I want to discuss the resolution which we have before us, and I am going to adopt the plan suggested by my good friend from South Carolina. He said we had a case in court and that able lawyers had spoken on one side, naming the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Daniel], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], who did not exactly agree with them; and he named the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORKER] and himself on the other side, and said they did not exactly agree, but that he was going to be an ally this time of the Senator from Ohio. He said that the case would be argued by

Now, I will agree that we have a case in court, and the resolution simply calls upon us to investigate what? The facts in regard to the discharge of these troops. What do you want to investigate the facts for, when the lawyer on the other side of the case admits the guilt of his clients? My friend the Senator from South Carolina put in testimony here that can not be overcome, which convinces me that fifteen years ago the Twenty-fifth Infantry ought to have been discharged.

It has always been a rule of law in my State, where I practice law, that when a lawyer gets up and admits his client's guilt, a plea was entered and the judge passes judgment upon the verdict.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will pardon me— The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly; with pleasure.
Mr. TILLMAN. So far as the guilt of the soldiers is concerned, I have no doubt of their guilt; but I was trying to locate the man who was more responsible than the soldiers for this trouble. Does the Senator agree with me on this point too?

Mr. CLAY. I do not think that anyone is more responsible for it than they are. I think the men who did the

Mr. TILLMAN. But you have not found out who they are, and you are punishing 167 when nobody has tried the 20.

Mr. CLAY. I lay down the proposition to the Senator from South Carolina that if 20 soldiers out of 167 took their guns in the dark hour of night, left the garrison, and went into the town for the purpose of shooting down innocent people, and came back and joined their companies, and I either had to turn out innocent men or keep the guilty wretches in the companies, beyond any question I would turn out the guilty with the innocent before I would retain the innocent and the guilty.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from South Carolina?

Certainly. Mr. CLAY.

Mr. TILLMAN. Until the War Department, through its regular channels, by court-martial, shall determine whether or not it can find or why it did not find the 20 guilty, it has no jurisdiction and the President has no jurisdiction to turn out 167.

Let us see what my good friend from South Carolina said in his speech on Saturday about the guilt of these The Senator said:

men. The Senator said:

So within two weeks—I believe they got there on the 28th of July—on the 13th of August, about midnight, somebody runs amuck; a white man is killed in one of the barrooms where the negroes had been denied the privilege of drinking. The chief of police has his horse killed under him, his arm shattered so it has to be amputated; houses are perforated with bullets—houses in which women and children are lying in bed and where the lights are still burning. The men being in the dark, of course it is difficult to prove positively that these were colored soldiers, but I do not imagine that any evidence will ever be produced or can be produced to show that this crime was not committed by some of the Twenty-fifth Infantry stationed at Fort Brown. I am thoroughly satisfied of it myself. I am convinced by the negative rather than the positive testimony, and from my knowledge of negro character after fifty-nine years' contact with them. I claim to know as much about the characteristics of the American negro as any man living, and I have no more doubt the negro soldiers did these infamous things than that I am alive and standing here.

The Senator from South Carolina says that these guilty men

The Senator from South Carolina says that these guilty men ought to be tried by court-martial; that they ought to have been identified. I will agree with him, if it could have been done. But suppose the President of the United States had directed a court-martial. Suppose the court-martial had proceeded to try the twenty guilty men. In order to try men by a court-martial it is necessary to name the men who did the crime, to identify each man, and he is tried just like he is tried in a court of law. The court-martial trial would have failed and these guilty wretches would have been sent clsewhere to kill and murder men, women, and children.

Mr. TILLMAN. But the President could have sent these men to the Philippines. They were under charges, and the War Department had not exhausted its instrumentality and its machinery to try to sift the evidence or try to get any evidence at all. I say the President has been derelict; that he has transcended his authority; that he has been untrue to the duties of his high office not to have held them in the Army until he had exhausted all the instrumentalities to see whether he could catch the guilty or not.

Mr. CLAY. That is the difference between the Senator and myself. We never will get together on that proposition. I do not hesitate to say that after a thorough investigation by the Department of Justice, by the major of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, by the Inspector-General, and by the citizens, it has been absolutely impossible to identify a single one of the persons charged with this offense. In my judgment it will never be done. If the President of the United States had simply called for a courtmartial to try the men for the offenses that they had committed before he dismissed them, what would have been the result? The court-martial would have been compelled to find they could not identify the guilty. The court-martial could not have separated the guilty from the innocent; all would have escaped, and the men who have violated the law for the last twenty years would have been retained in the Army.

But, Mr. President, what does the resolution authorize? What is the object of the resolution? It authorizes an investigation of fact to determine whether or not these men are guilty, and here is my friend from South Carolina, the leading lawyer for these negro troops, pleading guilty before the country and pleading guilty in the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Georgia, who is my very dear friend, ought not to make fun of me in that way. I expressly disclaimed being anything but a cornfield lawyer and expressly disclaimed that the Senator from Ohio, who is a great would get any help from me along that line. have laid down certain fundamental principles of American liberty and jurisprudence; that every man must be considered innocent until proved guilty, and that it is better that ten guilty men shall escape than that one innocent man shall suffer. Senator from Georgia knows that 167 have been punished and only 20 have ever been charged with crime. He can stretch his conscience to suit that case and turn them all out or not. I can not do it.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I do not have to stretch my conscience in this instance.

The Senator from South Carolina says that we only charge fifteen or twenty or thirty of these men with doing this shoot-Now, that is true; but the Senator from South Carolina has proven that heretofore that almost every one of these men been guilty of similar conduct. He has sustained the President.

Mr. TILLMAN. And they ought not to have been sent to Brownsville, for the Secretary of War and the President

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I do not know whether the President knew it or not. I do not know whether the Secretary of War knew it. The presumption is if the Secretary of War or the President knew that these men had acted in the same way on other occasions they would have been dismissed from the Army heretofore, and if they did not dismiss them they did not discharge their duty.

The Senator puts in evidence five affidavits, and he proves that in 1885 these men were on the same mission of murder and riot. He comes along and he finds that in Arizona, in Nebraska, and in Florida they were guilty of the most infamous conduct, killing and murdering, and that their record for crime is without a parallel.

Mr. President, I think that every man, woman, and child in this great Republic ought to approve and applaud the President of the United States for dismissing these troops.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the President had discharged these men for the first offense or the second offense or the third offense or the fourth offense there would not have been any Brownsville murder.

Mr. CLAY. Then I submit-

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the President and the Secretary of War must be deadly ignorant of the character of the negro soldiers if it takes the Brownsville business to bring out the facts.

Mr. CLAY. If the President did wrong the first time, if he did wrong the second and third time, and if he has done right the fourth time the Senator from South Carolina ought to congratulate him that he has gotten right at last.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I cling to certain fundamental principles of constitutional liberty and law. I do not allow my prejudices or my feelings to prevent impartial justice from being done in this instance. The conduct of these men does not make me forget that we dare not give up principles, and that the President must not do an unlawful and unconstitutional act in order to do what my friend here thinks sentimentally is right.

Mr. CLAY. I did not know that the Senator from South Carolina was a man of prejudice. It is the first time I ever heard it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have prejudices, and if the Senator says he has not, he knows—I will not say what. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAY. I will say this, Mr. President: We all have our prejudices, but I never in my life have done an intentional wrong to any human being.

Mr. TILLMAN. I can say as much.
Mr. CLAY. I do not doubt it. Then you and I have at last gotten together.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope so.

Mr. CLAY. Now, Mr. President, I ask to insert as a part of my remarks—I should like to read it, but I only intend to occupy a few minutes of the time of the Senate-the evidence introduced by the counsel for these troops.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let the Senator simply say that they are extracts taken from the reports coming to us from the War Department in regard to transactions which have occurred heretofore in which these same men of the Twenty-fifth Regiment were involved. I merely made a synopsis in my own language of the facts set forth in the official documents.

Mr. CLAY. I introduce as evidence the statement furnished by the Senator from South Carolina, showing the conduct of these troops at Sturgis City, Dak., September 19, 20, 1885; similar conduct that occurred in Winnemucca, Nev., June 29, 1899; a similar conduct that occurred in San Carlos Agency, Ariz., October 13, 1899; a similar conduct that occurred in El Paso, Tex., February 16, 17, 1900, and also in Niobrara, Nebr., Paso, Tex., February 10, 17, 1500, and also in Modrara, Nebr., October 29, 30, 1904, and in Key West, Fla. In fact, Mr. President, I am profoundly astonished that these men have ever been permitted to stay in the Army during the last four or five or seven or eight years. They are undoubtedly ruffians; they are undoubtedly murderers; they undoubtedly have no regard for law, and are unworthy to bear the arms of the United States Army and be paid by the Government for the purpose of defending our people. They have shown that they are drunkards; they have shown that they are rioters; they have shown that they are murderers and utterly without character. The part of the war record the Senator introduces shows these particular facts. The Senator said:

shows these particular facts. The Senator said:

I ask to incorporate in the Record a brief résumé or synopsis of the different acts of violence, murder, riot, shooting up towns, etc., of the Twenty-fifth Infantry which has been compiled and sent to us, supplemented by one case coming from Key West, Fla., which appeared in yesterday's Record in the speech of Mr. Slayden, of Texas, in the shape of an affidavit of Mr. Knight, sheriff of Monroe County, Fla., as to one of their escapades or criminal acts as they were going to Cuba. In the affidavit the sheriff testifies to the fact that a member of that regiment was arrested by the police and imprisoned in jail, and about midnight forty or fifty members of the company visited the jail and threatened to kill the sheriff, and do dire and sundry unlawful acts unless this man was released, and, in fear of his life, the sheriff turned him loose. I will ask that these various matters may be incorporated in the Record without reading. I will just give the headlines: Sturgis City, Dak; Winnemucca, Nev; San Carlos Agency, Ariz; El Paso, Tex; Niobrara, Nebr.; Key West, Fla.

In all these instances this very same regiment had perpetrated outrages almost as great as the one at Fort Brown. It was known that this was the character of the regiment, and yet the War Department, ignoring the protest and the warning of the Representatives from Texas in this body and in the other, sends them there anyhow, and it is to locate the indirect responsibility, if I can not locate the direct responsibility for this crime and for this tragedy, that I shall present one reasons after a while.

The papers referred to are as follows:

"ROWS THE TWENTY-FIFT' INFANTRY HAS BEEN IN.
"Sturgis City, Dak., September 19-20, 1885.—Twenty-fifth Infantry was stationed at Fort Meade, 12 miles away, and on account of some imaginary grievance came into the town and killed Dr. H. P. Lynch.

About fifteen or twenty soldiers were in the party and were armed with Government rifles. A mob then lynched Corporal Hollis. In retallation a body of negro troops went to town and shot up a dance house, killing a cowboy. Four men were arrested and turned over for trial. Troops were not removed.

"Winnemucca, Nev., June 29, 1899.—Twenty-fifth Infantry stopped at Winnemucca to get supper, and negro troops went into a saloon and a free-for-all fight ensued, in which the bartender was killed. About thirty soldiers went into the saloon and ran the barkeeper out and robbed the saloon. Same troops went on to Carlin and robbed another saloon, and the train pulled out before the proprietor could make complaint to the officers. After the shooting at Winnemucca, and even while it was going on, the negro soldiers all made a break for the cars of the train and became so thoroughly mixed that nobody could identify the men who had been in the saloon. The authorities held the train from 6 o'clock until 1.30 at night and then had to let them proceed without finding the guilty parties.

"San Carlos Agency, Ariz., October 13, 1899.—Indians complained that soldiers came into their camp and mistreated their women, and upon the authority of the officers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry arrested two of the negro soldiers at their camp. In retaliation thirteen negroes went to the Indian camp and severely beat four of the Indians. Two soldiers turned State's evidence, and all were arrested and given to the cityl authorities for trial.

"El Paso, Tex., February 16-17, 1990.—Nine men of Company A made an attack on the city jail, where two of their companions were confined on charge of drunk and disorderly, and they killed a policeman on duty at the jail and had one of their number killed. One of the soldiers turned state's evidence, and all were turned over to the authorities for trial.

"Niobrara, Nebr., October 29-30, 1904.—A dance hall about 1½ miles from Fort Niobrara was shot up and a woman was killed and two men wounded. Two soldiers

"However, the Twenty-fifth Infantry has been conspicuous even among the negro troops for its persistent career of crime and mutiny. In 1898, while on the way to Cuba, the regiment was delayed a few days in Key West. What they did there to maintain their record of insurrection and contempt for law is told in the following language by the sheriff of Monroe County. Please observe that the statement is sworn to. I have a letter from an attorney of Key West, who was then police judge, which confirms the statement of the sheriff and which also says that a drunken soldier, whom he was arresting, fired his pistol at an officer.

"STATE OF FLORIDA, Monroe County:

"State of Florida, Monroe County:

"Before the undersigned authority personally appeared Frank W. Knight, who, being duly sworn, says: That I was sheriff of Monroe County, Fla., in May, 1898, and that the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry (colored) was at that time in the city of Key West awaiting orders for Cuba. That on the 20th day of April, A. D. 1898, at about 10 p. m. of the same day, one Henry A. Williams (colored) and one of the men belonging to the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry was brought to jail by the city police, charged with an assault with intent to kill; that at about 1 a. m. next morning at least thirty or forty of the soldiers belonging to said Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, armed with their guns, came to the jail and surrounded the jail, and came to the door of said jail and demanded the said Williams, saying that if he was not delivered to them they would break the jail down. I, being overpowered and no arms to defend myself and the rest of the prisoners in jail and fearing trouble might come to all in jail, thought it best to deliver said prisoner to them, intending to report the matter to the commanding officer at the barracks the next morning. Deponent further says that another reason why he delivered the prisoner over to them was because he had other prisoners in jail charged with murder, and he feared that if he did not turn over this man they would carry their threats into execution and he would then lose those whom he had confined for murder. That the conduct of these men was bolsterous, and they were crying out all the time that if I did not turn this man over they would riddle me with bullets and that there would not be a brick left in the building.

"Notary Public, State of Florida, at Large."

Mr. Tillman. In speaking about the type of men who composed this regiment, I will quote this from the record in regard to the Sturgis incident:

"A few minutes afterwards another lleutenant came to the house and said he had heard firing from the direction of Sturgis, but thought it was at the 'Half-Way House.' The general then ordered him to take another detachment and arrest the soldiers. In about a half hour afterwards a horseman came riding up in great haste and informed the general that the soldiers had fired into 'Abe Hill's' house and killed an Inoffensive cowboy who was standing there, and that they had also fired volleys into one or two other houses. General Sturgis then ordered that Captain Ord should make a check roll call, examine the arms, and bring in such as had the appearance of being recently fired. This was done. But the fellows had scampered back by short cuts over the hills and gotten into their bunks before the roll call, which disclosed the absence of only three, who, I think, were satisfactorily accounted for (p. 320)."

As to Winnemucca, it says:

(p. 320)."
As to Winnemucca, it says:
"Daylight had now so faded that only flashes of the discharges (five to eight in number) were seen. It is admitted by Klucny that no shooting occurred until the men left the saloon. After the shooting the enlisted men dispersed quickly, running for their coaches. In the meantime some one had gone to the Lafayette Hotel and apprised the officers there at supper of the shooting, but before they could reach the scene of the disturbance the men were in their coaches."
So these fellows were trained how to shoot up a town and murder men and then mingle with the innocent and get back to quarters or wherever they might at that time belong, and therefore hide the trail of the actual criminal and prevent detection.

Mr. President I say that I do not ask their conviction be-

Mr. President, I say that I do not ask their conviction because they are colored men. Not at all. God forbid that I should ever arrive at that period of life where I would be willing to wrongfully inflict any penalty upon a colored man who had committed no crime. I would give the white man and the colored man in the courts of justice equal and fair protection. I would give to each a fair trial and inflict no wrong upon either.

When it comes to a discussion of political rights there may be a difference of opinion; when it comes to a question of the conferring of suffrage, as to what class of persons ought to receive the right to vote, it presents a different question; but when it comes to the question of a man's life or his liberty, no true man, no upright man, will ask that an innocent man be convicted.

Mr. President, I come now to one of the facts which the Senator from South Carolina discussed, and that is this: He insists in this case that the President has discharged 167 men, and that not more than 20 or 30 of these soldiers are guilty; he insists that innocent men have been punished by the President as well as guilty men. I do not construe the contract of enlistment as does the Senator from South Carolina. In the first place, I construe the contract of enlistment simply to be a contract for hire. The Government hires a soldier to serve it for three years, unless sooner discharged, and agrees to pay him so much for his services. If the Government should come to the conclusion that the soldier has not honestly and faithfully performed his duty and has not complied with his contract, as a matter of discipline for the good of the Army, the President of the United States has the right to terminate the contract; and that has nothing to do with the punishment of the soldier for crime.

Mr. President, suppose I have hired a man for three years to work for me. I agree to pay him $125 per year. While on a drunken spree he goes out and commits the offense of assault with intent to murder. I call him into my office and say: "On account of your improper conduct, you are discharged." That does not mean that I am punishing a man for assault with intent to murder. The President of the United States believed that these men had not rendered honest and faithful service; he believed they were unworthy to be soldiers; he believed that they ought to be discharged from the Army. If they had vio-lated the laws of Texas or the laws of the United States, he could have them tried before a court-martial, but if he desired simply to dismiss them because of the want of faithful service in order to maintain discipline in the Army, he could terminate the contract. To my mind, there is a clear distinction between the punishment of these men for a crime and dismissing them for the want of honest and faithful service.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia uses a case, as an analogy, of his hiring a man to work for him for three years and then discharging him because he got drunk and attempted to commit murder; but if the Senator's man were to tell him, "Senator CLAY, I have not done this," would the Senator discharge him because he had heard some negro down the street in Marietta say that his man had got drunk and kicked up a row and tried to commit murder? That is the simile; that is the parallel. Will the Senator answer?

Mr. CLAY. I would investigate the conduct of the man.

Mr. TILLMAN. And that is all we are asking.

Mr. CLAY. I would investigate the conduct of the man, and if the facts and circumstances were such as to convince me that he had broken the law, that he ought to be put in the penitentiary, and that he was unworthy to be in my employ, then I would discharge him. Now, what does the Senator from South Carolina say? He has investigated the facts, and these soldiers whom he represents on the floor of the Senate are all guilty wretches-every one of them-and still the Senator wants more

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not understand the statement of the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLAY. I say the Senator from South Carolina admits the guilt of these men.

Mr. TILLMAN. I admit that some of these soldiers committed the offense; but 167 of them did not do it, and only 20 of them are charged with having done it.

Here are 167 soldiers, and 40 of them at one time Mr. CLAY. heretofore tried to commit the offense of assault with intent to murder and run over a town. Fifty-two of them at another time were drunk in a saloon, and it was almost impossible to subdue them. Here were 167 of them; 20 or 30 of them fired from the garrison, leaped over the walls, shot into private houses, and came back and put up their guns, and not a single soldier could be found who would testify against them. The President of the United States could not have done anything else, if he was faithful to his oath of office, except to discharge those men.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the President should have discharged the balance of the regiment, because they are all equally of the type that the Senator says these 167 are. Now, be fair and carry your own logic to its inevitable conclusion.

CLAY. Mr. President, the Senator has said that the President discharged too many men; and now he says that the President did not discharge enough. That is the conclusion which the Senator from South Carolina reaches.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am merely taking the argument of the Senator from Georgia to show that the President ought to have discharged the whole crowd.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, it was a trying situation, and the Secretary of War and the President of the United States did exactly what the Senator would have done. Suppose that the President had done nothing; had said "we can not find the guilty negroes; we know they did it; it has been proved that they did it; no one denies it, but we can not identify the guilty ones: therefore we will let them remain in the Army and retain them because of the want of evidence to identify the guilty who would have arisen on this floor to defend the President of the United States under such circumstances?

I say, Mr. President, that if the Senator from South Carolina had risen in his seat and denounced the conduct of the President of the United States as unfaithful to his oath of office for leaving in the Army twenty murderers, leaving in the Army others who concealed the crime of attempting the lives of innocent women and children, I would have joined with him and said that he deserved impeachment, instead of the applause and approval of the American people.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me there?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly. Mr. TILLMAN. Yet this very President has failed in four specific instances, as to which the Senator has just furnished the facts, to do this very thing. If he had not discharged these 167 men-for what motive I am not prepared to say

Mr. BACON. The present Executive was not the President in all those instances.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, he was President when the last three instances occurred. He was President in 1904.

Mr. CLAY. But not in 1885.

TILLMAN. I know that that is away back yonder. When did the other instance occur? One happened in 1904. Mr. CLAY.

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well, 1904. The present E rely President then. He had just been reelected. The present Executive was surely President then.

But the point I am trying to make is that if the President had not discharged these men there would never have been anything said about it or any discussion of it here, any opening up of the facts, and those cutthroats and murderers would be going to the Philippines to engage in their delectable occupation over

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I must forbear to engage in further controversy. I must get through with my remarks, for I only intended to speak for a short time.

I was coming to one of the things the Senator from South Carolina had said, that when men are charged with crime there ought to be an investigation of the charge before there is any action taken. Let me tell you, if I am not mistaken, that this case has been pretty thoroughly investigated not only by the War Department, not only by direction of the President, but by a committee composed of the ablest lawyers of Brownsville, Tex. I want to say that just after this shooting oc-curred, the next morning a little after daylight, you will find that the major of the Twenty-fifth Infantry went immediately to work to discover the guilty parties. He did not at first be-lieve that his men were guilty, but after a thorough investiga-tion, Mr. President, he reported to the Secretary of War that his men were undoubtedly guilty. He called upon a committee of the citizens of Brownsville to assist him in the investigation, and the most impartial and upright men of that town were appointed to make this investigation in conjunction with the major of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. They sat for more than four days; they heard the testimony of fifty witnesses; they examined the locations where the shooting began, the direction of the balls, the houses that were first struck; and they examined witness after witness to show the position of the troops when they were firing. That committee of citizens unanimously reported that the soldiers were guilty, but that they could not find the guilty ones. The major also reported that they were guilty, but that he could not locate the guilty The President of the United States was not satisfied with that investigation. He immediately sent an inspector there, whose duty it was to unearth such crimes, and after thorough investigation for more than a week he reported to the President of the United States that these men were guilty and that they ought to be discharged from the Army.

Let us do the President of the United States justice. If he is right, let us sustain him; if he is wrong, let us condemn him. The President was not yet satisfied. He immediately sent a brigadier-general of the inspectors' division to make another investigation, issuing an order giving the men a certain time within which to testify and disclose the guilty parties. He made a thorough investigation, tried to get the soldiers to testify, but was unable to secure any more testimony, and he reported that they ought to be dismissed. Not only that, but the Department of Justice has taken this case up and sent one of its ablest lawyers to Brownsville to discover, if possible, the guilty parties. What has been the result? The identical men who did the shooting, Mr. President, have not and, in my judgment, will not be discovered.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has mentioned the various efforts of the President and the instrumentalities used. does he think of the President's failure to adopt the suggestion of the major that detectives should be enlisted and be put in among these men and all restrictions removed on their liberty of action, so that they could go about and try to ferret out from the loose tongues and the talking in confidence among these negroes, as the Senator knows they will talk, as to who did this "glorious deed?" Why did not the President follow did this "glorious deed?" Why did not the President follow that clew or suggestion? What does the Senator have to say about that?

Mr. CLAY. I will state to the Senator that I have never had a word with the President of the United States about this case in any way whatever, and do not know his personal views.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want the Senator's opinion as to the wisdow or the unwisdom of the President in not doing this thing, if he was honestly desirous of getting at the facts. All this other business is how not to do it and would disgrace even the Senate in that line.

Mr. CLAY. I do not hesitate to tell the Senator that I believe the President of the United States honestly desired and tried to discover the guilty men. He may not have adopted the best method for that purpose. It may be possible—and I think the Senator is probably correct in his view—that the sugges-tion of the major would have been a good one; but the failure of the President of the United States to adopt the suggestion, in all probability, can not be attributed to a desire to allow any guilty man to escape. We may have different judgments in regard to what means we ought to pursue in order to reach the guilty parties. I presume that when the President of the United States sent to Brownsville an inspector and then another inspector and then a lawyer from the Department of Justice, with the view and purpose of finding out who were the guilty parties, to a large extent, he left it to their judgment as to what course they should pursue. I say in all candor that the Committee on Military Affairs should go to Brownsville with the view of investigating this case, I am sure that the Senate would leave it to their judgment as to what course they ought to pursue.

But I rose for the purpose of saying that, in my judgment, no good can come from pursuing the proposed investigation. I do not believe the Committee on Military Affairs-and I do not make any reflection upon them-have any more means of ascertaining and finding out who the guilty parties are than has the Secretary of War. It is the special mission of an inspectorgeneral to investigate crimes of this kind. He is familiar with the lives of the soldiers; he is on the ground; he can critically examine the situation. Doubtless already much more informa-tion has been obtained than a committee of the Senate ever will be able to obtain by its own efforts.

In the short time that I have been in the Senate I have been convinced that investigations made by committees of the Senate as to transactions that took place hundreds and thousands of miles away from here are generally futile. Observation and experience have convinced me that those who are on the ground, who know the location, who know how everything occurred, who the day afterwards saw where the shooting took place, who know the feeling existing between the two races, are much better equipped to find the facts than the Senate is equipped to find them. In my judgment, if the resolution is adopted, we will incur an expense and waste time on an investigation that may be called political, and never can result in any real good.

Mr. President, again, I want to say to the Senate that, as the resolution stands, it is only a question of fact to be investigated. The committee is not required to investigate whether or not the President had the legal and constitutional power to dismiss these men. They are only to inquire into the facts.

It is true that the grand jury of the county where this killing occurred investigated it most carefully, and I have been in-formed that they were unanimously of the opinion that a part of these troops committed this crime; but they were unable, after sitting more than a week, to find any witnesses who could identify one of these troops.

Mr. President, what effort has there been to find out the guilty We have had an investigation by a committee of citizens; we have had an investigation by the major; we have had an investigation by an inspecting officer; we have had an investigation by the grand jury of the county; we have had an investigation by the Department of Justice; and no testimony has disclosed the identity of the men who committed this crime.

Now, Mr. President, I have about covered this case. I desire to say just a few words more and I am through. I believe the President of the United States, by virtue of the fact that he is the commander of the land and naval forces, is empowered to make rules and regulations for the government of the Army.

I can not conceive how discipline could be maintained in the Army if the President of the United States could not weed out the unworthy, the unfaithful, and the dishonest. I do not believe the law ever intended, or ought ever to be construed, to mean that he can not dismiss an enlisted man without a court-

I understand there are three ways of discharging a soldier. One is an honorable discharge

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, there are four ways of discharging a soldier-by the President, by the Secretary of War, by the departmental commander, or by judgment of a court-martial. Mr. CLAY. The Senator from Kentucky is correct. The President of the United States has the right to discharge an enlisted man; the Secretary of War has the right to discharge an enlisted man, and the commanding officer of the department has the right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And he can be discharged by court-martial.

Mr. CLAY. That is right. During my short service in the Senate I have had three or four men from Georgia discharged from the Army with honor, and one or two without honor be-In one instance the Secretary of cause of improper conduct. War discharged an enlisted man because of the helpless condition of his parents and because they needed him to attend to them in their old age.

The President of the United States is not given power to discharge enlisted men in order to punish them. He is given power to discharge enlisted men when they have become unworthy, or when there are peculiar circumstances that will authorize their discharge. If these men have violated the criminal laws of the country, the President of the United States, in order to punish them, must summons a court-martial and give them a trial. I believe under the powers conferred upon him that he is authorized and empowered to make such rules and regulations for the government of the Army as he may deem necessary, provided they are not inconsistent with the laws which Congress has passed upon that subject.

It is absolutely necessary, in order to have good order in the Army, that the War Department shall have jurisdiction of the enlisted men, shall know their records, and shall be familiar with their conduct. If they become physically too weak to serve, if they become intemperate, if they become indolent and faithless in the discharge of their duties, then the Secretary of War and the President, both or either, are authorized to terminate the contract and get other enlisted men in their place.

I think the speech of the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] covers the law of the case. It is unanswerable, in my judgment. The Senator from Florida [Mr. Mallory] also delivered a speech which, from a legal standpoint, can not be answered. The Secretary of War has taken up this subject and discussed it at length. I will not read his report, as it is getting late, but I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD. It is a better speech than I can make upon the subject, and in my judgment it covers the law of the case. It begins on page 16 and continues on pages 17 and 18, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

(b) "Physically or in character, through geome disqualited for service, physically or in character, through geome disqualited for service as the service has been such as to warrant his reenlistment, the service has been such as to warrant his reenlistment, the will be seem and the physical property of the service has not been honest and faithful; that is, where the service has not been honest and faithful; that is, where the service has not been honest and faithful; that is, where the service has not been honest and faithful; the secretary of war for applicant during the meaning of the physical property of the physical property of the phys doubtless by proper recruiting, will soon be brought up to the usual number in each company. The order appears in the accompanying number in each company. The order appears in the accompanying exhibit.

Among the similar cases which are set forth in the exhibit is the case of the Fourth Cavalry. In that case a number of men in a squadron, roused to passion and violence by the killing of one of their number, lynched the person charged with the crime. It was impossible to determine who had committed the crime; no evidence was forthcoming from the members of the squadron. The members of the court of inquiry, consisting of General Kautz, Colonel Carlin, and Col. Thos. M. Anderson, recommended that the troops of the squadron be disbanded. The matter was presented to Acting Judge-Advocate-General Lieber, who, after pointing out that the organization and maintenance of the squadron was provided for by law, said: "The Secretary of War has therefore, strictly speaking, no authority to disband these companies as such. He may, indeed, discharge all the men of such companies, enlisting others in their stead, but this would be treating innocent and guilty alike, and the discharge would be in law 'honorable.' and in the case of the guilty would be a premium upon crime." Since that time the practice has been put in force by regulation of issuing discharges without honor, in which there can be no reenlistment, except by Executive permission. There is nothing in this precedent which, in the slightest degree, affects the legality of the present order, for the principle upon which the decision rests recognizes fully the complete power of the President to discharge every member of any organization.

Very respectfully,

WM. H. Taft, Secretary of War.

WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

Mr. CLAY. That report of the Secretary of War covers the case so far as the law is concerned. Mark you, in this discussion we have confounded trying the men for crimes with dismissing them for improper conduct. I agree that a dishonorable discharge can not be granted by the President of the United States. I agree that under the Articles of War a dishonorable discharge can only be granted after trial by court-martial and a conviction. The law provides for a court-martial trial where crimes have been committed, and if the President had at-tempted to have these men tried for this offense it would have been necessary to summon a court-martial and to have tried them by a court-martial. However, when he reached the conclusion that he simply desired to discontinue their services, to terminate a civil contract, to put at an end the contract be-tween the soldiers and the Government, he had a right to do so. Then, after discharge, they could be tried for the crime which they committed, provided they could be identified.

The President and I do not belong to the same political party. We disagree on a great many things, but I am frank enough to say that when he does something of which I approve I am ready to say so. I believe that when he sent inspectors there to ascertain, if possible, the guilty parties, when he used all the power of the War Department to ascertain who the guilty parties were, and when he could not identify them, and immediately dismissed 167 men, he did right; and an overwhelming majority of the people of my State approve and applaud his conduct. I do not say that the people of Georgia would approve his conduct if the men were innocent. In our State we provided by law for the disbandment of our colored soldiers simply because of the friction that often arose. With the racial feeling staring us in the face it may become necessary to do likewise in the Army of the United States. If the colored man wants to have the respect and confidence of the white man, he must make himself worthy in every respect. I say again, the President of the United States did right. He sought diligently to find out the guilty parties. The men who knew of this crime, the men who planned this crime, the men who concealed this crime, are as guilty as the men who did the shooting. In Georgia, and probably in every State in this Union, when murder is committed there may be accessories before and accessories after the fact. Accessories before the fact are those who counsel and advise others to commit murder. Accessories after the fact are those who know that a crime has been committed and conceal it. It was impossible, Mr. President, for twenty men to have taken their guns and left the walls of the fort and in ten minutes come back and then get their arms without some of the others knowing something about it. In my judgment, in view of the facts, the shooting was well planned and the arrangements were thoroughly understood.

There was deep resentment on the part of these troops because they were not permitted to drink at the bars with the white people. There was deep resentment because there was a collision between a white man and a colored man. Threats had There was a motive that prompted the crime. been made.

Mr. President, there was nobody to commit this crime except either these troops or the people of Brownsville. There were no feuds in Brownsville. The people were living in peace. They were living as neighbors. They were living as friends. It is to my mind preposterous that individuals in that town could have gotten together with guns for the purpose of shooting down other neighbors at night. As I say, there was nobody to do it except the soldiers or the people of Brownsville. The bullets that went into the houses, the shells that were found where the soldiers went were those manufactured by the War Department, and it has not been shown that a single citizen in Brownsville used similar shells.

Mr. President, just one word and I am through. The testimony discloses the fact, and three witnesses swear to that fact, that these soldiers fired first in the garrison where nobody else except the soldiers were located, and just as soon as they fired they leaped the walls and started through the town. And three witnesses identified the firing as taking place in the garrison, identified the direction which these men took; they saw them fire and followed them and saw them when they came back and went into the garrison. It is not disputed by anybody that these soldiers did the shooting. The only thing claimed by those who disagree with the President in dismissing the troops is the fact that the War Department did not identify the particular men who did the shooting. They have been discharged. They ought to have been discharged long ago. They are unworthy to wear the uniform of a soldier. They have been guilty of outrageous conduct before, and their conduct ought to meet the universal condemnation of all good men—white and black. I approve and applaud the conduct of the President, because I believe these men were guilty, and I believe he was right in discharging them. We ought to speak words of praise and not words of censure.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I shall occupy but a moment of the time of the Senate. I understand the fundamental proposition upon which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] base their contention to be that the President of the United States is not clothed under the law and the Army Regulations with the power summarily to dismiss these soldiers. As I do not intend to occupy the time of the Senate during this debate with any discussion of that question or of any other connected with it, I will contribute my small quota to what may be due in that regard in the shape of a precedent, which may be of some service in guiding us to a proper solution.

I hold in my hand an editorial published in a newspaper in my town—the Macon Telegraph—in which there is a recitation of certain facts and then a quotation of the authority or precedent to which I have alluded. I will ask that the Secretary read that part of it which is included within the marked lines. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from Georgia.

The Secretary read as follows:

[The Macon Telegraph, January 4, 1907.]

And now comes the Charleston News and Courier and presents a precedent for the President's action—one that is on all fours with it—from the record of Benjamin R. Tillman himself. For though the strenuous Carolinian has never had any experience at soldiering in the ranks, he has had a brief but lively experience at playing the part of commander in chief. The record produced by the News and Courier was made in connection with the almost forgotten incident of the "Darlington war." This "war," as it is called, occurred in April, 1894, when Tillman was governor and the dispensary was still in its experimental stages. The dispensary constabulary had been hunting blind tigers" in Darlington and had assembled at the depot to take the train for another point, when an altercation arose with some citizens which resulted in a conflict in which a popular young citizen was shot and killed. The populace flew to arms, while the chief State constable and the men with him took to the swamps, where for several days they were hunted by the enraged people. Governor TILLMAN acted with great promptness and vigor. He ordered the State military companies to assemble at Columbia and dispatched such companies as did not revolt to Darlington. Among the companies that obeyed the governor's orders at first was the Newberry rifles. The News and Courier says:

This company on Sunday night, April 1, was ordered to take charge of the two telegraph officer.

rier says:

This company on Sunday night, April 1, was ordered to take charge of the two telegraph offices in Columbia, to inspect all telegrams filed for transmission, and to reject all of a "sensational or incendiary character," the governor having assumed control of the telegraph lines on account of the alleged disturbances. The company performed the duty Sunday night, but on the following morning its commanding officer addressed to the governor a letter tendering the resignations of himself and his men from the service of the State on the ground that he and his command had not responded to the governor's call to exercise the "exceedingly distasteful duty of scrutinizing the private affairs of the citizens of South Carolina," and adding that the company believed that such service was calculated to further irritate the people and that the company did not care to be subject to such orders in future.

lieved that such service was calculated to intrict intract the people and that the company did not care to be subject to such orders in future.

At 5 o'clock on the afternoon of the same day Governor Tillman's judge-advocate-general read an order to six companies at inspection, signed "B. R. Tillman, governor and commander in chief," and addressed to the captain of the Newberry company, from which we quote the following:

"Under the laws of South Carolina the governor is clothed with discretion and power to call out the militia whenever, in the judgment of the governor, it may be necessary, and when so called into the service of the State the militia shall be subject to the same rules and Articles of War as troops of the United States. The action of your company and your daring to send it to me under these rules is mutiny and an insult to the commander in chief, who was given his commission by the people. The duty of the soldier—and the militia are soldiers—when called into service is blind obedience to orders from his superior or not to question them in any degree. You have falled to learn the first lesson, and I will make of you and your company an example. Your resignation is not accepted, but you are dismissed from the service of the State as unworthy to wear its uniform."

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am very glad that my distinguished friend, the Senator from Georgia, has given me the opportunity to add just a few words of explanation to the order which has just been read.

There was insurrection and a dangerous condition in the State of South Carolina. The people were divided on the subject of the regulation of whisky, and a riot had occurred in which three men had been killed, and a mob of several hundred were pursuing the State's officers whose duty it was to enforce the liquor Under those circumstances I called on the militia in the city of Columbia and in the city of Charleston, some ten or twelve companies, to go to Darlington and restore order and allow the civil law to take its course.

These companies rebelled outright; refused to respond to the order. I then called on all the companies in the State by telegram to repair to the State capital, some 60 miles from the seat of the disturbance, but really the head center of the rebellion against the State authority.

In the exercise of my duty and power under the statutes of the State I notified the railroads that they should not transport any armed bodies of men without my orders. I notified the two telegraph companies in the city of Columbia that they must transmit no incendiary telegrams; and as soon as I got one militia company into the city, the day after the riot, this Newberry company, I issued an order to its captain to take possession of the two telegraph offices, the Western Union and the Postal, and to supervise and direct the transmission of telegrams, allowing no incendiary messages to go out.

The result was that the next morning, with this condition of unrest and, as I said, of insurrection abroad in the State, these men and this captain wrote me the letter which has been read, and I issued the order which I did, adding something which has not been put in the article that has been read, "that God forbid that I should ever again have anything to do with any such bandbox soldiers." But if there is any analogy—bandbox soldiers." But if there is any ar Mr. WARREN. What sort of soldiers?

Mr. TILLMAN. Bandbox-fellows who use uniforms and brass buttons to make the girls fall in love with them and have not enough of the element of a soldier in them to obey orders. [Laughter.]

Now, no orders had been issued at Brownsville. There is no analogy whatever. My dismissal of these men was a legitimate exercise of and within my power as the chief executive and commander in chief. They had insulted me with their letter; they had assumed the right to resign when they were in the field; and I leave it to all sensible men to say whether or not the Senator from Georgia has strengthened his case by undertaking to justify the President in his usurpation of authority by pointing to a perfectly legitimate use of it on my part.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to say only a word. certainly had no intention to criticise the Senator from South Carolina

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh! I was out of the Chamber for a moment, and I thought it was the other friend of mine from Georgia. I did not know it was my friend the senior Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I repeat I had no desire whatever to criticise the Senator from South Carolina. Without undertaking to say whether all of the exceedingly stringent methods which he took preceding the particular order which is under consideration were justified, I wish to say that, so far as the issuance of that order was concerned, I think he acted clearly within his rights, and it is exactly what ought to have been done. In other words, troops which had been guilty of this great impropriety were no longer fit to be part of the militia of South Carolina, and the Senator from South Carolina as governor very properly, without waiting for any court-martial, dismissed them peremptorily as unworthy to wear the uniform of the State of South Carolina. That is the analogy, if the Senator will pardon me, which I think exists—that where the President of the United States found in the service of the United States soldiers who were unworthy to wear the uniform, and the continuance of whom with arms in their hands was dangerous to the peace and the safety of the public, he did, I think, as did the governor of South Carolina, entirely right and acted entirely within his rights and his power when he dismissed them summarily without waiting for a court-martal.

Mr. TILLMAN. I dismissed the entire company. I had

Mr. BACON. The President of the United States went the Senator two better and dismissed three companies.

Mr. TILLMAN. The trouble about that was that he dismissed them in piecemeal in order to get around the letter of He quibbled and dodged, as the Senator from Georgia is quibbling and dodging on the legal question.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have no criticism to make of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] when governor of South Carolina for his order dismissing a militia company from the service. From what I know of him I am only surprised at his moderation. I assume they were white soldiers, or he would have had them lynched.

Mr. TILLMAN. They were white, because we had not any of the other kind, thank God.

Mr. SPOONER. I should have very great contempt for myself if I could not investigate and fairly decide the questions involved in this matter—and they are mainly legal questions, I think, so far as they are properly involved—without any regard whatever to the color of the soldiers affected. I confess my sympathy for the colored soldier and my sympathy for the colored man. They have done wonders in many directions since they were brought out of the darkness of slavery into the light of liberty. They have made great progress in education, industrial and otherwise; in the acquisition of property, the ownership of homes, the management of business, and generally in acquiring the arts of civilization. The colored man has, more-over, abundantly vindicated his right to be a soldier, clad in the uniform of the Army, marching and serving under the flag. Undeniably the Southern States are entitled to great credit for the liberality and justice with which they have provided for their colored citizens, beginning at a time when it was a great burden upon their resources, because of the desolation and waste of war.

I have always as an American looked back with pride upon the attitude of the South long years ago, when she was less prosperous than she is now, in refusing to accept from the Federal Treasury money to help her educate her children. Not only, Mr. President, was it a proud, self-respecting, dignified position to take, but in the years that have since intervened no one can dispute, I think, that it was a wise one in the interest of education in the South.

I listened with regret, though not with surprise, to swift and general impeachment yesterday not only of the battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry at Brownsville, but of the regiment. The Senator from South Carolina spoke of them as "a lawless, brutal, murderous set of cutthroats," language which could not possibly be justly applied to so many men, for a company of soldiers could not be found in which there would not be a goodly number of law-abiding, faithful, manly men.

The Senator from South Carolina criticised the War Department for sending the troops to Texas to join the remainder of the regiment, explained, as the Record shows, by the Secretary of War in a letter to the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson], and said they should not have been sent to Texas. If they were "a lawless, brutal, murderous set of cutthroats," they ought not to have been sent anywhere, I take it, with rifles in their hands and the power to commit outrage.

But, Mr. President, I envy no man the narrowness of mental vision or the bitterness of hate that can lead him to indict in such language a regiment of soldiers, and if the Senator would have examined the record-

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suppose the Senator from Wisconsin wants to be entirely just.

I wish the Senator would be just. Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. TILLMAN. I try to be.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator makes a big failure sometimes. Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator himself sometimes fails, if he Mr. SPOONER. Oh, Mr. President, what does the Senator mean by being "honest?" will be honest and confess it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I say if you-

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator arrogate to himself the quality of honesty

Mr. TILLMAN.

Mr. SPOONER. Of frankness and fairness-

Mr. TILLMAN.

Mr. SPOONER. In excess of his colleagues?

Mr. TILLMAN. No.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

Mr. TILLMAN. When I confess my sins and know that every man here is equally sinful—that is what I mean.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator can confess for himself, not for me.

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well; we will not quarrel about that. What did the Senator want to say? Mr. SPOONER.

The Senator spoke a moment ago of these Mr. TILLMAN. companies having been sent to join their regiment. If I recollect the letter of the Secretary of War, he speaks about the balance of the regiment or a company of the regiment being at Fort Ringgold, although I do not know where Fort Ringgold is. Anyway, they were somewhere in Texas, which is as big as all out of doors, as the Senator knows, and these men who went to Brownsville were not within possibly 500 miles of the balance of the regiment.

Mr. SPOONER. No matter— Mr. TILLMAN. So I did not indict the entire regiment. The Senator from Georgia has done that.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from South Carolina did not do it yesterday, but he did it-

Mr. TILLMAN. I indicted this set who had gone there and who showed by their actions in the riot the character of men they were, or some of them, at least. If it will do the Senator any good to do it, I will confess that there are good negroes, yes, thousands and hundreds of thousands and even millions of them. I have some that have been with me fifteen or twenty or thirty years.

Mr. SPOONER. The race ought to be obliged to the Senator. Mr. TILLMAN. I have said it before on this floor and I have said it time and again wherever I have discussed this question, I do not indict the whole race, and I do not hate the

Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. TILLMAN. I simply feel that I am superior to it. That Mr. SPOONER. That is a question I decline to discuss. In many ways the Senator is.

Now, Mr. President—

Mr. TILLMAN. When I say "I," I mean the white race is superior to the colored race. Now do you understand it?

Mr. SPOONER. I think a good white man is superior to a

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator think that the white race is not superior to the colored race?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, in a way, it has had advantages-

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, yes.

That the other race has never had. Mr. SPOONER.

It has evoluted in three or four or five Mr. TILLMAN. thousand years, and you want to put the blacks right alongside of us in fifty or seventy-five years.

Mr. SPOONER. Never mind that. I may have a word or two to say about that before I get through. But I do not care to discuss at any length the race question, which has nothing to do with the questions involved in this matter. I only wanted to say that this regiment and the other negro regiments have with the utmost valor and steadfastness, and generally with the best discipline and observance of law and the rights of others, won deserved fame as soldiers.

I saw this regiment in 1894 when it was stationed, and it was all together, at Fort Missoula, Mont. It has been my fortune to see the soldiery of several countries abroad. I have seen regimental parades, or what we call dress parades, in England, in Germany, in France. I have seen a great many in this country. I never saw one, Mr. President, anywhere more perfect in every way than this regiment at Fort Missoula.

Company B of this regiment, which was at Brownsville, and a number of other companies of this regiment, so far as the record shows and so far as I know, have never been involved in any conduct not worthy of the soldier.

Mr. President, the Senator referred to this record.

turn to the affair at El Paso, Tex., involving a number of members of a company-I do not remember the company

Mr. TILLMAN. I think it was C. Mr. SPOONER. Possibly it was C. Mr. CULBERSON. Company A.

Mr. SPOONER. Company A. If the Senator had read and remembered it, he would have discovered not only that the perpetrators of the offense there committed were identified and apprehended, but Captain Loughborough, in making his report,

I beg leave also to give the names of enlisted men of this command who have been loyal and faithful, voluntarily coming to me with information, without which it would have been much more difficult, if not impossible, to have apprehended the guilty.

Then he gives the names of eleven of the noncommissioned officers and privates of the same company as entitled to the foregoing commendation.

This regiment served on the frontier, was engaged in many fights with the Indians, served in Cuba, where the fighting was the hottest, and in the Philippines, and I think their commanders would testify that no better regiment ever mustered. And the same thing may be truthfully said, as I understand it, of the other colored regiments in the Army.

comradeship and greater concern for the welfare of the soldiers among and alongside of whom be served in Cuba than President Roosevelt. I think we have never had a President who has, while rigorous in discipline, been more solicitous for just treatment by all the people to the enlisted men of the Army and Navy than he. He has not shown the slightest tolerance of injustice to them by their commanders. From the standpoint of administration and enforcement of the law and the protective power of the law, he certainly has been without discrimination with reference to wealth or poverty, race or class. It can not be imputed to him that he could consciously inflict injustice upon the enlisted men of this battalion or upon any enlisted men in the Army or Navy of the United States.

Mr. President, my differences with the distinguished Senator from Ohio are upon the legal phases of this matter mainly, and with many of the principles of law which he announces I am entirely in accord with him. That this is a country of law, that no Federal official can be above the Constitution, that the President can lawfully exercise no power which he does not derive from that instrument or the laws of Congress enacted in pursuance of it, of course all must admit. That we may not in some circumstances have what would be in other circumstances autocratic power in this country I can not say, because in its very nature the discipline and conduct of an army requires more or less the summary exercise of power. No one knows that better than the chivalrous and gallant soldier who introduced and advocates this resolution. The very idea of command, which can not be dissociated from a commander in chief, involves more or less autocratic power. Under our system many safeguards have been thrown around its exercise.

I am not opposing the resolution of investigation of the Brownsville affair, properly worded. I do object, however, to the resolution as introduced by the Senator from Ohio and now The inevitable trend of the debate on Saturday and to-day has strengthened me in my objection to it. It has been discussed rather as a case in court than as a legislative function. If the President has, as the Senator from South Carolina, and others, seem to think, exercised a power which under the Constitution and the laws of the country he does not possess, and in a manner greatly to the prejudice of citizens, it is quite clear to me that the Senate ought not to enter upon an investigation of it. Even if a President abuses the power which he possesses or exercises it with bad motive, I should greatly deplore an attempt by the Senate to investigate it or pass judgment upon it.

In our system the powers of government are distributed among three branches, each coordinate and independent of the other, neither of which is responsible to the other in any manner, except as prescribed by the Constitution. The President is not responsible under the Constitution to the Senate or to the House of Representatives or to both. It is especially not the function of the Senate to investigate and determine whether the President has usurped power or abused a power which he possesses, because under the Constitution the Senate sustains a peculiar relation to the President. Of course it is one of the legislative bodies of the Congress. It is equal in power, in respect of legislation, to the other, with one exception. not permitted to originate revenue bills. But, Mr. President, peculiar functions have been conferred upon the House as to some matters, and upon the House alone, and also upon the Senate to the exclusion of the House. None of them are legislative functions. The Senate participates in the making of the laws as a legislative body. It participates, with the President, in appointments, which is not a legislative function. It participates in the exercise of the treaty-making power. But, Mr. President, its most solemn function under the Constitution is a judicial one. Section 3 of the first article provides:

The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments. When sitting for that purpose they shall be on oath or affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside, and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present.

Section 2 of the same article provides that the House "shall have the sole power of impeachment." The power of impeachment is as plainly and exclusively vested in the House of Representatives as is the power to try impeachments vested in the Senate. Investigations to determine or which will determine whether an Executive act is violative of the Constitution and beyond the power of a President, or whether, if within his power, it has been abused, if that is the object of the inquiry, surely is properly with the impeaching body, and should not be exercised by the body which alone can constitutionally try and determine. Of course this is an abstraction as to this case and as to this President, but to my mind (I have had occasion to the other colored regiments in the Army.

I know of no man who has evidenced a stronger feeling of garded by the Senate, for it would be a horrid thing if when articles of impeachment of an officer reach this Chamber they should be laid before a court which in another capacity, having investigated and considered the same matter, had prejudged it.

Mr. President, so much for that. If a President, whether in his capacity of Chief Executive or as Commander in Chief. has performed an act or made an order which was within his authority to make, I can not see that it is competent for this body or the other, or both, to take testimony as to the wisdom of that executed act, upon which to determine whether it will by legislative act set it aside. The Congress, if dissatisfied, may withdraw the power or place additional limitations upon its exercise for the future, but I do not see that it can by legislation render void the act. When a power is possessed by the President or an officer of the Government to do an act in a defined contingency or in his discretion, his decision as to the existence of the contingency or that circumstances are such as to demand the performance of the act is conclusive, and the act can not be impeached or overturned by the Congress because in its opinion the exigency had not arisen or that the power was unwisely exercised. The general rule is well stated by the Supreme Court in the case of Martin v. Mott (12 Wheat., 19) thus:

Whenever a statute gives a discretionary power to any person, to be exercised by him upon his own opinion of certain facts, it is a sound rule of construction that the statute constitutes him the sole and exclusive judge of the existence of those facts. And in the present case we are all of opinion that such is the true construction of the act of

Which authorized the President "whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation, etc., it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to call forth such number of the militia of the State or States most in danger," etc.

It is no answer that such a power may be abused, for there is no power which is not susceptible of abuse. The remedy for this, as well as for all other official misconduct, if it should occur, is to be found in the Constitution itself. In a free government the danger must be remote, since in addition to the high qualities which the executive must be presumed to possess of public virtue and honest devotion to the public interests, the frequency of elections, and the watchfulness of the representatives of the nation carry with them all the checks which can be useful to guard against usurpation or wanton tyranny.

The principle is peculiarly applicable to a lawful order made by the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. I am assuming now that the President possessed the lawful authority to make the order discharging without honor the enlisted men of the battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry at Brownsville. The fact that he made such an order does not need investigation. The reports and papers upon which he based it are in the possession of the Senate, and the inquiry into the discharge, and it seems to be limited to that, is as to the wisdom and justness of the order, and the adequacy of the information upon which the President based it; in other words, as it has been put, for the purpose of affording to the enlisted men discharged a day in court.

Aside from the general principle, which is sufficient, I deny that under the Constitution the Congress has any such relation to the Army as permits it to set aside an order lawfully made by the President as Commander in Chief. The provisions of the Constitution which bear upon the subject are few and simple. The Senator from Ohio, who is a very able lawyer, and has said all that can be said by anyone, I think, in support of his contentions, read them.

Congress is given power to declare war, which necessitates the use of an army or navy, or both. Congress is given power to raise and support armies, with the limitation that "no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than Congress is given power in addition to make two years." Congress is given power in audition to make "rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." The Constitution provides, in section 1 of Article II, that "the executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States," and in section 2 that "the President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States."

The provisions quoted from the Constitution as to the power of Congress in respect to the Army and Navy are logical and plain. They admirably express the manifest purpose of the framers of the instrument. I will consider them later.

The Constitution has left entirely without definition the scope of the power of the President as Commander in Chief, and the measure of the power was left to be sought elsewhere. I can not agree that the sole constitutional power of the President is to command the Army in time of war and conduct campaigns. That his power is vastly greater in time of war than in time of peace has been decided, and is not open to dispute. It is largely to be sought in the law of nations and the rules of civilized warfare. But an army and a vavy must be commanded in time of | peace, as well as in time of war, else neither would be fit for war. What the measure and scope of this power is in time of peace it is not necessary at this time to discuss. That it is the power to command, with all that is inherent in the function and necessary to its exercise, can not well be disputed, and that whatever the power is it is conferred by the Constitution and can not be interfered with by the Congress will not be denied.

I quite agree with the Senator from Ohio that we need not. even if we may, seek the measure of this power in the power of the King at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. There is something to be said on both sides of the proposition. courts have referred to the power of the King as furnishing some guide as to the constitutional power of the President as Commander in Chief. It is said in the opinion of Judge Knott, speaking for the Court of Claims in the case of Street v. United States (24 Court of Claims, 230), after referring to the power of the Crown at the time of the adoption of the Constitution exclusively to control the British army, that-

This power of command and control the framers of the Constitution placed in the hands of the President, with only two restrictions set upon it: that Congress should have power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;" that the appointment of officers should be "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

The President can remove any officer of the Army or Navy without cause by appointing, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, another to supersede him. This was settled in the Mullan case (140 U. S., 240). The practice has wisely made the tenure of military and naval office "practically for life or during good behavior." But I speak of the power.

In Ex parte Milligan (4 Wallace, 2), quoted by the Senator from Ohio, was involved the power of the President to establish mostial law in Indiana and the validity of the trial of a citizen martial law in Indiana and the validity of the trial of a citizen by military commission upon the charge practically of giving aid and comfort to the enemy. Milligan and others were sen-tenced to death by a military commission, and the court held properly that, as Indiana was not in any sense the theater of war, the civil government there being in full operation, and the courts discharging uninterruptedly their functions, martial law could not lawfully be put in operation in Indiana and that a military commission could not lawfully try and condemn a citi-In the opinion, upon the general subject which I am discussing, the court say:

Cussing, the court say:

Congress has the power not only to raise and support and govern armies, but to declare war. It has, therefore, the power to provide by law for carrying on war. This power necessarily extends to all legislation essential to the prosecution of war with vigor and success, except such as interferes with the command of the forces and the conduct of campaigns. That power and duty belong to the President as Commander in Chief. Both these powers are derived from the Constitution, but neither is defined by that instrument. Their extent must be determined by their nature and by the principles of our institutions.

The power to make the necessary laws is in Congress; the power to execute in the President. Both powers imply many subordinate and auxiliary powers. Each includes all authorities essential to its due exercise. But neither can the President, in war more than in peace, intrude upon the proper authority of Congress, nor Congress upon the proper authority of the President. Both are servants of the people, whose will is expressed in the fundamental law.

It must be certain that where Congress has failed to make

It must be certain that where Congress has failed to make rules for the discipline of the Army the power of command lodged in the President carries with it authority in him to issue an order absolutely necessary to the discipline of the Army. An army without discipline, Mr. President, is a mob. Instead of being a shield and a protection to the people it is a menace. It is more dangerous to those who maintain it than it is to the enemies of the country.
Mr. PATTERSON.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to say that I am very much interested in the argument the Senator from Wisconsin is mak-

Mr. SPOONER. I thank the Senator for the compliment. Mr. PATTERSON. And I had been thinking on identically the same line myself-

Mr. SPOONER. I think that is a higher compliment,

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, well now, do not be too complimentary—and I had about reached the conclusion that Congress could not legislate so as to restore these men to the Army.

Mr. SPOONER. I reached that conclusion myself.

Mr. PATTERSON. But here is the proposition about which was not clear: Would not Congress have the right to remove the disability of reenlistment?

Mr. SPOONER. I will get to that.

Mr. PATTERSON. So that the men might reenlist if that disability were removed.

Mr. SPOONER. I will get to that. I doubt if Congress has the power to pass an act permitting these but no other similarly enlisted men to reenlist. Congress may provide-I will reach PATTERSON. Could Congress remove the disability Mr. from those soldiers?

Mr. SPOONER. Congress can undoubtedly, by rule, applicable to all similarly situated, remove disabilities. Whether Congress can overturn, directly or indirectly, the effect of a single order affecting only the men embraced in that order I greatly doubt.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator will understand that I am simply stating the proposition, and that I should like to have the benefit of the conclusion of the great legal mind of the Senator from Wisconsin concerning it.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator keeps on he will make me almost doubt his sincerity.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no.
Mr. SPOONER. As to the power of Congress, it has a power binding upon the Commander in Chief provided only that its exercise does not impair his authority to command, which I think includes discipline in certain aspects of the matter.

Congress shall have power to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

What does this mean? What are rules as the term is used here? I have found a few definitions:

That which is prescribed as a guide; a governing direction; a uniform or established course of things; systematic method or practice; a general principle of management; a regulation.

Pomeroy says in his work on Constitutional Law, page 295:

§ 467. Congress may make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. It is to be noticed that this power is entirely independent of the ordinary judicial department of the General Government. It is applicable only to a special class of men—those in the land or naval forces. The fifth amendment of the Constitution shows conclusively that the rules to be made under this clause were to be outside of ordinary civil judicial proceedings, for it excepts persons in the land or naval forces, and those in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger, from the safeguard of an indictment.

§ 468. The language of this clause should be carefully observed. Congress may make rules—

Italicizing the word "rules"- the object of which shall be regulation and government. It can not utter exceptional or transitory mandates which affect the management and disposition of the Army or the Navy. This particular grant of power confers no authority upon the legislature to usurp the functions of the Commander in Chief. The rules framed by Congress for the regulation and government of the land and naval forces form together the military law of the land; they are a part of the general statutory legislation of Congress applicable to a special and designated class of persons, soldiers and sailors; they stand on exactly the same footing as any other statutes, are just as binding, and the decisions of courts thereunder are just as effective as any other laws or any other judgments.

In the case of Swaim v. United States (28 Court of Claims, Judge Nott, afterwards Chief Justice, and a very learned and able judge, says:

and able judge, says:

But nevertheless there remains the significant fact in our military system that the President is always the Commander in Chief. Congress may increase the Army, or reduce the Army, or abolish it altogether; but so long as we have a military force Congress can not take away from the President the supreme command. It is true that the Constitution has conferred upon Congress the exclusive power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;" but the two powers are distinct; neither can trench upon the other; the President can not, under the disquise of military orders, evade the legislative regulations by which he, in common with the Army, must be governed; and Congress can not in the disquise of "rules for the government" of the Army impair the authority of the President as Commander in Chief.

Mr. President, I will not take time to read further, and it ought not to be necessary to read further.

It is not admissible to strike the word "rules" from this constitutional provision, or to rob it of its ordinary meaning or of its significance. The word was used for some purpose, and its use would seem to make it clear that the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, so far as this power was conferred upon Congress, is to be accomplished through RULES. To contend otherwise is to practically eliminate the word from the provision. If the word "rules" had been omitted and the provision had given power to Congress to make regulations for the land and naval forces, the meaning and purpose would not have been much if any different.

The power to regulate commerce has been defined as the power to prescribe the rules by which commerce shall be governed. The President as Commander in Chief can not make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, although he can issue orders, regulations, and instructions in execution of or supplementary to but not in conflict with the rules enacted by the Congress for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. Evidently Congress was to make the rules for the government and regulation of the Army. The President, commanding the Army, in accordance with the rules made by Congress for its "government and regulation," may make orders, general and special. Such orders certainly can not be countermanded by Congress. That would be commingling the legislative power with the executive power; the power to make rules with the power to make orders in execution and administration of the rules. An army could not be disci-plined and rendered efficient under such a system.

An act setting aside an order which had been executed would neither be a rule nor a regulation. It would be an edict or order. The opinion of Attorney-General Cushing, who had not only been a soldier, but was a great lawyer (6 Opinions Attorney-General, 11), is instructive on this subject.

To my mind the distinction between these two powers-the power to command and the power to make rules for the government and regulation of the Army-is vital both in time of peace and in time of war.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

Mr. BACON. Will the schatter parton me a moment?
Mr. SPOONER. Yes.
Mr. BACON. I am in thorough accord with the Senator on the proposition that the President acted within his power in issuing these orders.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what I assume.
Mr. BACON. But he differs with me as to the question whether or not the President derives these powers from the indefeasible grant of the Constitution.

Mr. SPOONER. That is an abstraction here.

Mr. BACON. I simply want to ask the Senator, though, as he is pressing this with considerable degree of force, whether the Senator, in stating that the President has jurisdiction to make orders and Congress has the jurisdiction to make rules, intends to have us understand by that either that Congress is limited as to the rules which it can prescribe, or, that after having prescribed any of them, the President can vary them or modify them or annul them by order?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I think that Congress is not without limitation. It all turns on the construction of the word rules.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, that I may state my proposition clearly—I do not wish unduly to interrupt him and do not propose to continue the discussion, but I should like very much to have the views of the Senator upon the proposition as I shall suggest it.

The sentence in the Constitution, it seems to me, is as unlimited in its expression as words could well be employed to convey. The sentence, in enumerating all the grant of powers of Congress, is this, which the Senator has already read:

To make rules for the government and the regulation of the land and naval forces.

The word "government"—"to make rules for the government"—it seems to me can not be modified. There is no place where a line can be drawn. "Government" is complete; it is exhaustive; it is entire; it is conclusive, unless there is a limitation put upon it. When Congress is given the power for the government of the Army, I am at a loss to see where there can be a limitation put by construction upon the exercise of a power which shall be without limit, which shall be complete in itself.

If the Senator will pardon me a moment-I will not again interrupt him, and I do not do so now for the purpose of controversy, but for the purpose of hearing from him—it seems to me that whenever you undertake to say that "government" does not mean entire government you at once enter into the domain of construction, under which the entire power of Congress can be chipped away until nothing of it shall remain, because, at last, it would rest in the discretion of the Executive perhaps, on the one side or of Congress on the other, as to where the line should be drawn. That discretion might vary in one case or in the other to an extent practically to annul what was, to my mind, the evident intention of the Constitution, that Congress should have the complete power.

I think the only indefeasible grant of power, Mr. President, is to be the Commander in Chief; but as Commander in Chief he has no more power than any other Commander in Chief would have who should be created by statutory law, except that it is an indefeasible power. Of course I will not elaborate that, and I only suggest it, having the greatest confidence in my friend's legal judgment, to ask that he may address himself to it.

Mr. SPOONER. If the word "government" were the only word there and it were used in its broadest sense, as the Senator uses it, the function of a commander in chief would be nil.
Mr. BACON. Not at all.
Mr. SPOONER. Pretty much so.

Mr. BACON. Not at all.

Mr. SPOONER. But Congress is given the power to make rules—"rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." The Senator does not mean to be understood that under that the power of Congress has no limit? Does the Senator think Congress has the power to pass a law requiring the commanding general, if he is at the head of the Army, to keep his office and remain in Washington?

Mr. BACON. That would not be for the government of the Army. That would be for the government of the Commander in Chief.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, that would not be a rule for the government of the Army, would it?

Mr. BACON. No; that would be in regard to the exercise of his constitutional powers.

Mr. SPOONER. Congress did that, Mr. BACON. Congress did that?

Mr. SPOONER. It enacted a law that the President should transmit all orders to the Army through the General of the Army, that the General of the Army should remain in Washington, and that his headquarters should be in Washington.

Mr. BACON. That was in the time of Andrew Johnson.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes,
Mr. BACON. I am inclined to think that Congress was within its right and its power when it did that. It may have been very poor policy and influenced by a very improper motive.

poor policy and influenced by a very improper motive.

Mr. SPOONER. Then Congress may provide what troops may be sent to this State or to that?

Mr. BACON. I think so, most undoubtedly.

Mr. SPOONER. Or what troops shall be sent upon this service and what upon the other?

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SPOONER. And what ships shall be sent to the South Atlantic and what shall be sent somewhere else?

Mr. BACON. I would not hesitate for a moment to answer "yes" to that.

Mr. SPOONER. If the President should make an order as Commander in Chief assigning an officer to a State, could Congress revoke it?

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly will pardon me just a moment Undoubtedly it might. Now, if the Senator

Mr. SPOONER. Before he passes away from this interesting point, I should like to have the Senator inform me what power the President has beyond the reach of Congress as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces of the United States.

Mr. BACON. As the Senator invites it, I will answer in the same spirit.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; on the basis of his argument.
Mr. BACON. My opinion, Mr. President, as to the power of the Commander in Chief is this: I do not think every power exercised by the Commander in Chief must be dictated by Congress. I think there are certain natural functions of a commander in chief which, in the absence of restrictions on the part of Congress, any commander in chief can exercise-those which are usually exercised. But at the same time I think there is none which can not be restricted or controlled by Congress.

If the Senator will pardon me for a moment-I fear that I trespass unduly upon his time, but I will take the time, with his permission—just to state the proposition that all the clauses of the Constitution in connection with the grant of power to Congress which I have just read indicate the very great solicitude and earnest intention on the part of the framers of the Constitution to take away from any one man the power to wield the Army independently of Congress; and even so jealous were they of the power that they were not willing even that Congress should have an undue exercise of that power, but that, as in the case of the limitation of the length of appropriations, they must go back to the people every two years for the purpose of getting that which alone can sustain an army. Now, let me read those several propositions for the purpose of illustrating the position that the evident purpose of the Constitution was to take away from any one man the dangerous power of unrestrained control and government of the Army. They had too much reason to fear and to dread it.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not contend for that.

Mr. BACON. In the enumeration of the many powers of Congress, the greatest enumeration of powers to be found in any written document from the days of Magna Charta or previous to that time to the present day-among this great enumeration of powers are these:

To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.

To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and payed forces.

naval forces.

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

I say that all those general grants of power, endeavoring to reach every phase of the important things which relate to the raising of armies and to the government of armies, are laid down in this succession of provisions in a way which, to my mind, clearly points to the purpose of the framers of the Constitution that the great power which would be lodged in one man if he had the power to wield an army without restriction should be denied to the President and should be given the Congress; and that the sole, indefeasible grant of power given to him was that he should be Commander in Chief, to exercise that great office subject to the superior power of Congress to prescribe the rules for the government and regulation of the Army. "Government," I repeat, is a term which can not be qualified. It is complete and entire and does not mean partial government.

The Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me for having trespassed so much upon his time.

Mr. SPOONER. Congress may locate a fort in the State of Georgia. Can Congress pass an act providing that certain troops shall be assigned to that fort?

Mr. BACON. I have not the slightest doubt of it; not a particle.

Mr. SPOONER. What is there to this Commander in Chief? Mr. BACON. The Commander in Chief is to command the Army, subject to the power of the Congress to prescribe what shall be done in its government. The government of an army refers as much to where it shall be located as to what uniform it shall wear.

Mr. SPOONER. I mean particular troops.

Mr. BACON. I am speaking of particular troops. Congress can prescribe that the uniform of the artillery shall be red—

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.

Mr. BACON. And the uniform of the cavalry yellow or buff. Mr. SPOONER. I admit all that.

Mr. BACON. It may prescribe that there shall be so many troops in this place and that many in the other.

With all due respect and the greatest regard for the judgment of the Senator from Wisconsin, I beg to say that I have never heard on the floor of the Senate a doctrine which, to my mind, was more dangerous to the institutions of this country than the doctrine that the President of the United States has any power in the use of the Army which can not be controlled by the lawmaking power of the land, except the power to command.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is very evident that the Senator from Wisconsin will not be able to complete his remarks this evening, and I should like to ask him if it would be agreeable to him now to yield to a motion to adjourn?

Mr. SPOONER. I yield for that purpose. Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 15, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, January 14, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last were read and approved.

ESTELLE CATHRINE WASSON.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read resolution No. 654, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay Mrs. — Wasson, widow of William H. H. Wasson, deceased, late assistant journal clerk on the rolls of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months' pay at the rate of compensation received by him at the time of his death, and a further sum, not exceeding $250, on account of the funeral expenses of said William H. H. Wasson, said amounts to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 2 insert in the blank space "Estelle Cathrine."

The amendment was considered and agreed to. The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BERT W. KENNEDY.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESOLUTION NO. 669.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House miscellaneous items, fiscal years 1907 and 1908, payable in equal monthly installments, a sum equal to the rate of $500 per annum as additional compensation to Bert W. Kennedy, as assistant doorkeeper of the House, until his salary, at the rate of $2,500 per annum, shall be otherwise provided for by law.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 4926) for the relief of Etienne De P. Bujac.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to House concurrent resolution 48, requesting the President to return the bill (H. R. 18214) granting an increase of pension to John Ingram.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S.

5001) granting an increase of pension to Louis A. Baird.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed Senate concurrent resolution 36, relative to printing testimony taken in the investigation pursuant to Senate resolution of June 25, 1906, directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make a thorough investigation of the elevator and grain buying and forwarding business of this country to determine to what extent special favors have been granted to them by railroad companies,

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7675. An act to establish a fish-cultural station on the Kennebec River, in the State of Maine; and

S. 976. An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the civil war and the war with Mexico.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 214. Joint resolution to provide for the printing of 16,000 copies of Senate Document No. 144, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session; and

H. R. 14811. An act to authorize George T. Houston and Frank B. Houston to construct and operate an electric railway over the national cemetery road at Vicksburg, Miss.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On January 8, 1907:

H. R. 21678. An act to provide for the extension of time within which homestead entrymen may establish their residence upon certain lands which were heretofore a part of the Crow Indian Reservation, within the counties of Yellowstone and Rosebud, in the State of Montana.

On January 12, 1907: H. J. Res. 196. Joint resolution relating to the construction of a bridge at Fort Snelling, Minn.;

SENATE BILL AND RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill and resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

An act (S. 7675) to establish a fish-cultural station on the Kennebec River, in the State of Maine—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Senate concurrent resolution 36:

Resolution relative to printing copies of the testimony taken in the investigation pursuant to Senate resolution of June 25, 1906, directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make a thorough investigation of the elevator and grain buying and forwarding business of this country to determine to what ex-tent special favors have been granted to them by railroad companies, etc.-to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 189. An act to establish a life-saving station at the Isles of Shoals, off Portsmouth, N. H.; H. J. Res. 214. Joint resolution to provide for the printing of 16,000 copies of Senate Document No. 144, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session; and

H. R. 14811. An act to authorize George T. Houston and Frank B. Houston to construct and operate an electric railway over the national cemetery road at Vicksburg, Miss.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL. Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 21202. An act fixing the time for homestead entrymen on lands embraced in the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation to establish residence on same; and

H. R. 21951. An act to authorize the Alabama, Tennessee and Northern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River, in the State of Alabama.

ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR DEPARTMENT MESSENGER AND CLERK. Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts, I present the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution No. 662.

Resolution No. 662.

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, miscellaneous items, fiscal year 1907, payable in equal monthly installments, the sum equal to the rate of $250 per annum as additional compensation to the Department messenger, the sum equal to the rate of $500 per annum as additional compensation to the superintendent of the folding room of the House, the sum equal to the rate of $200 per annum as additional compensation to the chief clerk of the folding room of the House, the sum equal to the rate of $400 per annum as additional compensation to each of the four clerks in the folding room of the House, the sum equal to the rate of $300 per annum as additional compensation to the foreman of the folding room of the House, and the sum equal to the rate of $200 per annum as additional compensation to the assistant Department messenger unless and until their salaries, respectively, at the increased rates herein authorized, shall be otherwise provided for by law.

The resolution was considered, and agreed to.

The resolution was considered, and agreed to.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, in December there was a resolution reported by the Committee on Accounts which was not voted upon on account of the absence of a quorum. I would like to call up that resolution and call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the following unfinished business, which the Clerk will report..

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution No. 671.

House Resolution No. 671.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House for the services of an enrolling clerk a sum equal to the rate of $3,000 per annum, and for the services of an additional assistant enrolling clerk a sum equal to the rate of $1,800 per annum, payable, respectively, in equal monthly installments, until their compensation at the rates herein authorized shall be provided for by law: Provided, That the enrolling clerk for whose services payment out of the contingent fund of the House is hereby authorized shall be in lieu of the enrolling clerk at $2,500 now authorized by law.

The SPEAKER On December 10 when this resolution was

The SPEAKER. On December 19, when this resolution was pending before the House, there was no quorum on the question of agreeing to the resolution, and it comes over as unfin-The question is now upon agreeing to the reso-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I think those of us who were not here when the resolution was put up before the holi-days ought to know something about the resolution. I know that the question of the system of enrollments has received at-tention by the House, but does this resolution contemplate a reform in the system of enrollments, a changing of the methods, or what is its purpose?

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, its purpose is to put an additional clerk in that office, so that they may not be overburdened with work as they have been in the past, so that the mistakes which have been made in the past may be avoided in the future.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is that the only purpose of the resolution-simply to increase the clerical force of the enrolling di-

Mr. CASSEL. That is all the authority that this committee has, to recommend the employment of additional clerks.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does not the resolution make an annual clerk at $3,000 a year?

Mr. CASSEL. No; at $1,800; but it increases the salary of the present enrolling clerk from $2,500 to $3,000 per annum.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Increases the salary of the present clerk?

Mr. CASSEL.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman know whether any committee of the House contemplates a plan for a general reform of the enrolling service?

Mr. CASSEL. I do not. The Clerk of the House has stated, however, to this committee that if this additional clerk is appointed they would be able to avoid all difficulties that they have had heretofore.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman thinks that if this resolution is enacted it will so perfect the system of enrollments as to reduce the possible mistakes to a minimum?

Mr. CASSEL. I do.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. As good a system as can be devised?

Mr. CASSEL. We do. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASSEL. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the exact purpose that the gentleman has in mind this morning, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CASSEL. To pass the resolution which is held over from December because of a lack of quorum, which is to in-crease the salary of the present enrolling clerk to $3,000 a year and to authorize the employment of an additional clerk, at $1,800, for the enrolling room. We all appreciate the necessity of additional service in that room, and it is for that purpose that we have called up the resolution at the present time

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like the gentleman to yield me two or three minutes.

Mr. CASSEL. I yield the gentleman five minutes. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how the appointment of an additional clerk in that office would expedite the business of reading these enrolled bills, provided the Chief Clerk has to read them all himself? Mr. CASSEL. The other man can do the mechanical work.

He can assist in the transcribing and in going over and preparing the bills for the final reading.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. These enrolled bills are all printed, are they not?

Mr. CASSEL. They are, but they must be compared.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I know, but if the Chief Clerk is to compare them, how can an assistant clerk help him compare them?

Mr. CASSEL. Why can not the assistant help to compare them?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why, I would not want to be bothered with him if I were the enrolling clerk.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how many clerks are there now in the enrolling room?

Mr. CASSEL. As I understand only the Chief Clerk now. He has charge of that all, has he not?

Mr. TAWNEY. I know he has charge of it, but he has a number of assistants. He has a number of clerks to aid in the com-Of course they have to be compared, There parison of bills. are bills there all the time, and when they are passing as many as 600 bills here in a day, all of which have to be enrolled, it keeps that force of clerks in that office busy all the time under the diection of the Chief Clerk.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] a question or two. Since that controversy here in December I was amazed at being informed that the enrolling force was in no way responsible for getting the $3,000,000 appropriation into that bill that had been voted out. Now, if it is true I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota who was responsible for that?

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand the responsibility rests upon the Committee on Enrolled Bills, a committee of this House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, we had better raise their salaries then.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; the proposition here is: With the additional assistant to assist the chief enrolling clerk in taking charge of the enrollment of bills, will relieve the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and to some extent the clerks of the committee. The Committee on Enrolled Bills has never met during this Congress and did not meet during the last Congress. The comparison which is supposed to be made in the Committee on Enrolled Bills is made by the clerks employed by that committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, has the Committee on Enrolled Bills a clerk or clerks?

Mr. TAWNEY. They have clerks—two, I think.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If that committee never meet, what in the name of heaven do they want with a committee clerk or clerks?

Mr. TAWNEY. In order to make sure that no mistake of this kind will creep into the enrollment of bills. The clerks to the committee operate as a check upon the clerks in the enrolling room. This is virtually a double comparison, and necessarily so, in order to insure accuracy. That is the object of it. with the additional assistant, I am informed by the Clerk of the House and also by the chief of the enrolling room, he will then have a double check in his own department and not depend so largely as he has to do and has done in the past upon the services of the clerks in the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, hitherto have clerks in the enrolling room operated with the clerks of the enrolling force proper?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; they work independently. One operates as a check upon the other.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, if the Enrolling Committee never meets, what do the clerks do?

Mr. TAWNEY. They make a comparison of bills. Of course the Committee on Enrolled Bills is not expected to meet for the purpose of sitting down and making comparison of all the bills which come to them from the enrolling room.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What are they expected to do?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not mean the Committee on Enrolled Bills never meets. He means they do not have a formal meeting of the committee for the purpose of comparing these bills. The chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills and the clerks are working on the bills—

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Doing what?

Mr. MANN. Comparing these bills returned there by the enrolling clerk. They are compared first at the Printing Office, then by the enrolling clerk, and afterwards compared by the Committee on Enrolled Bills, through their clerks, to find if mistakes have crept in.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now let me ask you a question as you are up-

Mr. MANN. Very seldom.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who actually compares these enrolled bills, the chief of this enrolling force or some of his assistant clerks?

Mr. MANN. He compares them as far as it is within human power to compare them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If he can not devolve the work upon this assistant, then what is the point of having an assistant?

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly evident that the chief enrolling clerk does not compare, for instance, word for word every one of the pension bills which were passed here the other day. The purpose of this proposition is that in different hours or when it is beyond human possibility for one man to make all these comparisons to have another man to help make compari-A man, for instance, sitting down by himself to compare the 600 pension bills which were passed by the House the other day probably could not do it short of a good many days.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman suppose that they do compare such bills as that?

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, those bills are read word for word and compared exactly—every bill that passes the House—not only by the enrolling clerks, but also by the clerk of the Committee on Enrolled Bills. I may say to the gentle-man that that work is sought to be done perfectly, and the only mistakes that creep in come because of the "patched" appearance of the bill, to use a peculiar word, as it comes from the committee on conference, where it is putting together different portions of a long bill, a part of it stricken out here, a part inserted there, and agreed to here, without any consecutive connection as far as the report is concerned. Sometimes something is left in which ought to be stricken out.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman believe that simply multiplying the number of assistant clerks will in any way expedite that work?

Mr. MANN. I know that it will expedite the work. say to the gentleman, whenever I have charge of a bill on the floor of the House and it is passed I always follow it up through the Printing Office, through the clerks on enrolled bills, and through the Committee on Enrolled Bills. I know that very often these things are delayed. Sometimes bills never reach the President, because of the delay in enrolling, and that delay comes largely from the delay in the comparison of the bills.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want to make one more remark in order to withdraw a remark I made when we had this bill up before. In the general scuffle that took place the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] asserted that the chief enrolling clerks of the House and of the Senate were experts, and I said I did not believe a word of it. But since then I have investigated the matter somewhat and I think they are experts. I think it is only fair to state that. But such transactions that took place here on the last day of the last session is a serious reflection on the way legislation is done by the American Congress. Everybody was hanging around here on tenter-hooks, everybody wanting to get away, because the weather was so uncomfortably hot, and they had made arrangements to get away, when finally the session was prolonged here for six or eight hours after everybody supposed the House had adjourned. And if some contentious person like my friend from Illinois had made up his mind to defeat the final agreement on one of these bills he could have done it easily. That is all I have to say about this thing. I wished to express my opinion about it.

Mr. MANN. Just because I do not wish such a temptation presented to me I want to give a sufficient force to have the bills properly enrolled while a quorum is still in the city.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is very well said.

Mr. PAYNE rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Cassel] yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]?

Mr. CASSEL. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to recall the fact to the House that the delay on the closing of the session last year was not on general appropriations bills, but on the public buildings bill and on the bill that followed making appropriations for the public buildings. That came in at a very late hour, and it had to go through the enrolling room, and it took time to do it. That is the reason we were waiting, and it could not have been defeated except by a call for a quorum, because the two Houses had not agreed upon the concurrent resolution to adjourn.

I want to say a word further about that point. My understanding is that the House at the last session, as it has at this session, passed an unusual number of bills. We passed a large number of bills last Friday, every one of which had to be compared before being sent over to the Senate, and it made a great deal of work for those clerks. It is desirable that the Chief Clerk should look over every bill and make a comparison, as that is a double check upon the work of the assistant, and I understand that if another assistant clerk is provided then it will give the Chief Clerk an opportunity to personally oversee

I want to say further in confirmation of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said in regard to the chairman of this Committee on Enrolled Bills. I have known personally of his devotion to the work of that committee, and I think he spends as many hours in the work of his committee as any Member of the House, or any member of any other committee. I know that he personally exercises the greatest care to see that the enrollment is perfected, and my wonder is not that there was an error made last year on the last day of the session—an error of a few words which made a very important difference in the bill-but my wonder is that not more errors are made, especially at the close of the session, when these men sometimes work three and four days and nights consecutively, without any sleep, and without taking off their clothes, in order to get rest. I wanted to say this in justice to these clerks in the enrolling room.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. CASSEL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, what I said in regard to the Committee on Enrolled Bills not meeting had no reference whatever to the work of the chairman of that committee. I was colord who the committee were and when they met. I am included who the committee were and when they met. I am included who the committee were and when they met. asked who the committee were and when they met. I am informed by members of the committee that it is a fact that the committee has not met during this Congress and did not meet during last Congress as a committee. But that does not mean that the chairman of the committee has in the least neglected his duty. I corroborate everything that the gentleman from New York has said with respect to the industry and the faith-fulness of the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills in performing the work personally that devolves upon him.

Mr. CASSEL. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to. On motion of Mr. Casser, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

NEW DIVISION OF SOUTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF IOWA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

bill (H. R. 20990) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Iowa and to provide for terms of court at Ottumwa, Iowa, and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

district of lowa and to provide for terms of court at Ottumwa, Iowa, and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Davis, Appanoose, Mahaska, Keokuk, Jefferson, Monroe, and Wapello shall constitute a division of the southern judicial district of Iowa, to be known as the Ottumwa division of said court.

SEC. 2. That terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the said southern district of Iowa shall be held twice in each year at the city of Ottumwa, Iowa, and that until otherwise provided by law the judges of said courts shall fix the times at which said courts shall be held at Ottumwa, of which they shall make publication and give due notice.

SEC. 3. That all civil process issued against persons resident in the said counties of Davis, Appanoose, Mahaska, Keokuk, Jefferson, Monroe, and Wapello, and cognizable before the United States courts, shall be made returnable to the courts, respectively, to be held at the city of Ottumwa, Iowa, and all prosecutions for offenses committed in any of said counties shall be tried in the appropriate United States courts at the city of Ottumwa, Iowa: Provided, That no process issued or prosecution commenced or suit instituted before the passage of this act shall be in any way affected by the provisions hereof.

SEC. 4. That the clerks of the circuit and district courts of said district shall maintain an office, in charge of themselves or deputy, at the said city of Ottumwa, Iowa, for the transaction of the business of said division.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand this bill has been unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. LACEY. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It creates no new judge? Mr. LACEY. No, sir. It makes an additional place for holding the court in a division already existing.

Mr. MANN. Does it create any new officer?
Mr. LACEY. The clerk of the court will be the only new officer.

Mr. MANN. Where is that court to be held?

Mr. LACEY. At Ottumwa.

Mr. MANN. Is that in your district?

Mr. LACEY. It is.

Mr. MANN. How is it that it is not made at Oskaloosa instead of Ottumwa?

Mr. LACEY. Ottumwa is a larger place and more central to the territory to be served. Of course if it were a matter of personal preference I should like it to be at Oskaloosa, because I expect to be at Oskaloosa more continuously in the near future.

Mr. MANN. The only reason I can see for the passage of this bill is to accommodate the gentleman, whom everybody in the House wishes to accommodate, and therefore this new court ought to be at Oskaloosa instead of Ottumwa.

Mr. LACEY. I make it Ottumwa because I have taken into consideration the public interest rather than my own.

Mr. MANN. How many cases are there pending in this district now?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, a great many. There are about 200,000 people in this territory.

Mr. MANN. You have a court. This is to create a new division?

Mr. LACEY. It is to bring the courts closer to the people of that locality.

Mr. MANN.

How many cases are pending in the court?
Well, the southern district of Iowa has a great ading. There are a million people living in that Mr. LACEY. many cases pending. district of Iowa, and there are something over 200,000 people in the territory to be accommodated by this bill. create any additional judge, but the people of that particular territory will get two terms of the court a year in the vicinity of the litigants.

Mr. MANN. I want to say to the gentleman that it would be far beyond me to make any objection to the bill now as to the court to be established in his district at this time, when the House is about to lose the very valuable services of the gentle-man; but we have been in the habit lately of creating very many judicial districts, and so many new divisions, and so many new places of holding court that I think hereafter, if I am in the House, I shall want to know why. Why, no reason is given in this case; no reason is usually given except that now given in general language. We ought to know why.

Mr. LACEY. The reason is a very simple one. It is in the interest of justice everywhere that the courts should be close enough to the people so that they can be appealed to without unnecessary delay. In fact, in a very large district and with large distances to travel, the parties who want delay in the litigation, the parties who do not want trial, and parties who want to wear the other litigant out are accustomed to transfer cases merely to make the court as inconvenient as possible. is generally in the interest of justice in all cases to have the court near the centers of population; and this increase of places for holding courts is really often in the interest of orderly administration of justice, because it is easier to move a judge to 200,000 people than to move the people, or so many of them as get into litigation, off some distance to the judge. I think very few, and perhaps none, of these new divisions have been improvidently created. New districts have been created owing to the temptation to get a new judge where the necessity was not urgent; but as to new divisions or places of holding court the rule has been the other way. It is only where there is a real demand for it, in my experience, that these requests have been

Mr. MANN. At how many places in your State does the supreme court of your State meet?

Mr. LACEY. One.

Mr. MANN. Why do you not have a dozen places for it to meet, so as to bring it close to the people?

We used to have, and so did you in Illinois. Mr. LACEY. Mr. MANN. And we abolished it, because we did not believe in the principle you are advocating.

Mr. LACEY. But the gentleman entirely overlooks the one important fact which destroys the force of his argument. have adopted the method of printing all briefs and records for the presentation of cases in the supreme court. Witnesses and litigants and jurors do not have to go to the place where the supreme court meets, so that the necessity for having different places for holding the supreme court is not anything like as great as it is in courts of original jurisdiction, where witnesses have to be present and juries have to be in attendance. That is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, if it be a fact that the courts ought to be brought close to the people, then there ought to be a court in every county. There is a court in every county, and the proper method to pursue is not to move the Federal courts to the counties, but to take away the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, so that the courts of the counties shall have the jurisdiction and be close to the people.

Mr. LACEY. That is another question.

That question is before the House. Mr. MANN.

Mr. LACEY. I might agree with my friend on that as a gen-I have voted in favor of restricting the jurisdiceral principle. tion of the Federal courts whenever the opportunity has come I agree with him heartily that the local courts, close to the people, are safer and better for the administration of justice, as a rule; but, whether the gentleman likes it or not, there is a certain jurisdiction which can not be taken from the Federal courts, and we are talking about the situation as it actually exists. This jurisdiction is in existence, and the corporations of the country are organized usually in different States, as far as possible, so as to hold the Federal jurisdiction, and unwilling litigants often remove cases so as to get them as far as possible from the other side, to cause delay and inconvenience.

And because I think it is much more important Mr. MANN. that the question of the jurisdiction of the two courts shall be considered than it is to keep constantly multiplying new Federal courts, I shall hereafter reserve the right to demand a proper explanation of such bills.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. In the gentleman's time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Lacey, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REGULATION OF WHISTLES ON STEAM VESSELS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17624) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 4405 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," approved March 3, 1905.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to amend section 4405 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," approved March 3, 1905, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the word "title" and before the word "and" the words "including regulations governing the use of whistles as signals by steam vessels and prohibiting useless and unnecessary whistling;" so that the same shall read as follows:

governing the use of whistles as signals by steam vessels and proninting useless and unnecessary whistling;" so that the same shall read as follows:

"Sec. 4405. The supervising inspectors and the Supervising Inspector-General shall assemble as a board once each year at the city of Washington, D. C., on the third Wednesday in January, and at such other times as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe, for joint consultation, and shall assign to each of the supervising inspectors the limits of territory within which he shall perform his duties. The board shall establish all necessary regulations required to carry out in the most effective manner the provisions of this title, including regulations governing the use of whistles as signals by steam vessels and prohibiting useless and unnecessary whistling, and such regulations, when approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall have the force of law. The supervising inspector for the district embracing the Pacific coast shall not be under obligation to attend the meetings of the board oftener than once in two years; but when he does not attend such meeting he shall make his communications thereto, in the way of a report, in such manner as the board shall prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may at any time call in session, after reasonable public notice, a meeting of an executive committee, to be composed of the Supervising Inspector-General and any two supervising inspectors, which committee, with the approval of the said-Secretary, shall have power to alter, amend, add to, or repeal any of the rules and regulations made, with the approval of the said-Secretary, shall have power to alter, amend, add to, or repeal any of the rules and regulations made, with the approval of the said-Secretary, shall have power to alter, amend, add to, or repeal, when approved by the said Secretary, to have the force of law and to continue in effect until thirty days after the adjournment of the next meeting of the board of supervising in follows:

The following committee amendment was read:

Amend by striking out all after the word "title," in line 7, page 2, down to and including the word "and," in line 9, page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "and also regulations."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman what committee reported this? Mr. SHERLEY. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that the original section contains a provision that the regulations established by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have the force and effect of law. Did the committee consider whether those words ought not to be amended, and whether Congress should delegate to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the making of regulations that have the force and effect of law?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will answer the gentleman first, that the committee did not take any special action in regard to that, and secondly, that it is well settled, according to my personal understanding, that regulations made by Departments are only effective when in pursuance of law and that no Department can make new law. I do not understand that the provision here does any more than that.

Mr. PAYNE. I think it does, but as long as it is in the original statute I will not object to this.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Sherley, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PREVENTING COLLISIONS AT SEA.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (S. 6855) to amend the act approved August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.. That the act approved August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea," be, and hereby is, amended by inserting therein the following:

"ART 9. Fishing vessels and fishing boats, when under way and when not required by this article to carry or show the lights hereinafter specified, shall carry or show the lights prescribed for vessels of their tonnage under way.

"(a) Open boats, by which is to be understood boats not protected from the entry of sea water by means of a continuous deck, when engaged in any fishing at night, with outlying tackle extending not more than 150 feet horizontally from the boat into the seaway, shall carry one all-round white light.

"Open boats, when fishing at night, with outlying tackle extending more than 150 feet horizontally from the boat into the seaway, shall carry one all-round white light, and in addition on approaching or being approached by other vessels, shall show a second white light at least 3 feet below the first light and at a horizontal distance of at least 5 feet away from it in the direction in which the outlying tackle is attached.

"(b) Vessels and boats, except open boats as defined in subdivision (a), when fishing with drift nets, shall, so long as the nets are wholly or partly in the water, carry two white lights where they can best be seen. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask how far this includes the Great Lakes, what change it makes, and also whether there is anything in the bill which would enable a Member of Congress to drop an anchor to windward? [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will try to make it plain even to the gentleman from Illinois. There is, as the gentleman knows, an international code of signals relating to all vessels. Prior to about a year ago there was a condition that required consideration and negotiation from nearly all the civilized nations of the world, and this code of signals was agreed upon and adopted by Congress, excepting as to the ninth article, which relates entirely to fishing vessels.

Since that time all nations have agreed to the ninth article, leaving the United States alone operating under article 10. By this bill, which is long and apparently complicated, there is no change whatever made except that it adopts article 9 of the general agreement of all the nations.

Mr. MANN. That is perfectly satisfactory to me. Mr. GROSVENOR. The nations that have agreed to article 9 are Great Britain, Germany, Norway, France, Italy, Japan, Sweden, the Netherlands, Denmark, Austria-Hungary, Greece, Belgium, Argentina, Portugal, China, Peru, Egypt, Venezuela, Siam, Guatemala, and Costa Rica. Now, Mr. Speaker, or representations of the passession of the sage of this bill will simply put our fishing vessels in agreement with fishing vessels of the entire world. The bill has been passed by the Senate and has the unanimous support of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio, as a matter of great importance to me, representing as I do the largest salt water fishing district in the United States, who has requested this legislation?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The bill was introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Maine, at the request of the Commerce Commission of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if this is the unanimous report of the committee?
Mr. GROSVENOR. It is,

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Grosvenor, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported, by direction of that committee, the bill (H. R. 24103) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the gov-ernment of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS reserved all points of order.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9976)) to create a new Federal judicial district in Ohio, to be called the central district.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the substitute will be read for the bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.. That there shall be in the southern judicial district of the State of Ohio an additional district judge, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same power and jurisdiction now prescribed by law in respect to the present district judge therein.

SEC. 2. That no vacancy in the office of the existing district judge of said southern judicial district of Ohio shall be filled by appointment, and in case of such vacancy, there shall be thereafter one district judge only for said district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman to explain the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, it will be seen that the title of this bill provides for the creation of a new district in the southern district of Ohio, but the bill itself amends that title and merely provides for an additional judge pending the occupancy of the present district judge of that district. The report, which is quite elaborate, shows the enormous accumulation of business in the southern district of Ohio, which district, as the gentleman perhaps knows, includes more than half of the geographical surface of the State, extending clear up to the State line near Pittsburg, taking in the whole Ohio River section as well as the interior of the State up to the center. Judge Thompson, the present incumbent, is overworked to such an extent that he is a good deal of the time in danger of breaking down even if he does not imperil his life. The Attorney-General's Department made an investigation of the condition of that business, and while Judge Thompson, as everybody knows, is an able man, and an industrious and hard-working judge, it is impossible for him to keep up, or anywhere near keep up, with the amount of labor that is forced upon his hands. the first place that the headquarters of the district are in Cincinnati, but by a provision of law there is an eastern division of the southern district of Ohio and the court is held a certain portion of the year in Columbus, compelling the judge to travel to Columbus and sit there and then to generally hurry back again to Cincinnati, where he often finds the work accumulated to such an extent that it is impossible for him to get through.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I presume the bill is all right, and I am in favor of it, but I would like to ask the gentleman how many judges Ohio has now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Two.

Mr. HINSHAW. Are there two divisions of the State into indicial districts

Mr. GROSVENOR. There are two judicial districts, the northern and the southern district, and then the southern district is divided by what is called the "eastern division of the southern district." I would say, without any invideus purpose that while Pennsylvania has four and New York six Ohio has only two judges, and we have been pretty modest about this, because we provide that when Judge Thompson shall resign or retire, or whatever may happen, then there will still be but one judge left in that district.

Mr. HINSHAW. And this judge that is now to be appointed simply sits with the other judge?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; he is an added judge with equal power and function.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to object to the bill, but I do object in a way to that last provision. I think there ought to be two judges.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, I hope my colleague will not object.

Mr. KEIFER. No; I am not going to object. Mr. MANN. Is Judge Thompson eligible for retirement now?

Mr. GROSVENOR. He is not. Mr. MANN. What is his age?

Mr. GROSVENOR. In the first place he has not served ten years, and in the next place he is only about 64 years of age.

When he serves ten years he will be eligible for Mr. MANN. retirement?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; if he has reached the age of 70.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, unless we create an additional judge we will be in the position of practically retaining the services of Judge Thompson, when to a large extent he is incapacitated for taking care of the work on account of his physical condition.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I would not put it as strong as that. Mr. MANN. If the gentleman can not put it as strong as that, then there might be some question about the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would not like to say that Judge Thompson is disabled. He was shot through the lungs at the second battle of Bull Run, and the bullet is in that wound now, and sometimes it bleeds extensively and that lays him up for a time. Then he gets out and goes to work as industriously and effectively as any man on the bench of the United States court. He disposed of 222 cases last year, as shown by the report of the Attorney-General, and yet more cases came upon the docket of the entire district than he was able to dispose of.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman assumes that after the end of Judge Thompson's career on the bench one judge will be able to transact the business which Judge Thompson and the new appointee will be able to do now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not assume that at all.

Mr. MANN. The bill assumes that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The bill may possibly bear that construction, but it is better for us, in the interests of the public service, to get a judge that we can get than to be fighting for one that we fear we might have trouble to get.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me for a moment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that it is an entire misapprehension, if anybody has fallen into the idea, that Judge Thompson is incapacitated, in the ordinary sense of the word, from discharging the duties of his office. My belief is, with a pretty full knowledge, that Judge Thompson discharges his official duties with great facility and dispatch, and he disposes of more cases than the Federal judges generally do throughout the entire United States. He is sometimes broken down, because he has too much work for any one man to do. He is very ready and rapid in the disposition of business. He has a very difficult district. He holds a district court and a circuit court. Patent cases alone pile up on him enough to kill any man who has to go through them and work them out; and there are criminal cases both at Cincinnati and Columbus in great numbers, but in no sense is Judge Thompson broken down, except somewhat enfeebled by his wound, but his breaking down is more largely due to his having too much to do. My only criticism of the proposed law now is that it does not provide for two judges permanently in that district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none,

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Grosvenor, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the southern district of the State of Ohio.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER, WEST VIRGINIA. Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

bill (H. R. 23218) to authorize the Kentucky and West Virginia Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River at or near Williamson, in Mingo County, W. Va., to a point on the east side of said river in Pike County, Ky.

point on the east side of said river in Pike County, Ky.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Kentucky and West Virginia Bridge Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kentucky, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railway and highway traffic bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, at or near Williamson. in Mingo County, W. Va.. to a point on the east side of said river in Pike County, Ky., in the States of Kentucky and West Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved. expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman whether the provisions of this bill comply with the requirements of the War Department?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. The bill—as the report in the hands of the Clerk will show-has the approval of the War Department and conforms to the terms of the general bridge bill which was passed at the last session.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the bill the result of a unanimous decision of the committee?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.
The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Gaines of West Virginia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER, NEAR DEVON, W. VA. Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23219) to authorize Majestic Collieries Company, of Eckman, W. Va., to construct a bridge across Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, about 23 miles west of Devon, W. Va., a station on the Norfolk and Western Railway.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Majestic Collieries Company, of Eckman, Va., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railway bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River at a point about 2½ miles west of Devon, W. Va., a station on the Norfolk and Western Railway, in the States of West Virginia and Kentucky, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressive reserved.

SEC. 2. That the expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Gaines of West Virginia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ETIENNE DE P. BUJAC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution from the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 11, 1907.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 4926) for the relief of Etienne De P. Bujac.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States; which was read, ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

[For message see Senate proceedings of this day.]

NATIONAL CHILD LABOR COMMITTEE.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 6364. I might state that this bill was read on last District day. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio calls up the following Senate bill, with the statement that the bill was read on last District day, and the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6364) to incorporate the National Child Labor Committee. Mr. MANN. What status had this bill at the last District day?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The question of its consideration was raised and carried. The House raised the question of consideration and refused to consider on vote.

Mr. BARTLETT. When was that?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. On last District day.

Mr. MANN. I forget who raised the question of considera-

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], I think.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if I am not too late I wish to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Will the gentleman permit me to ex-

The SPEAKER. The House is supposed to be proceeding to the consideration of a bill, and it is too late to raise the question of consideration, although the gentleman from Tennessee could reserve his right and by unanimous consent make his statement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have the right to raise the question of consideration after the explanation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this bill is the outcome of a society or committee unincorporated, and which was formed at Carnegie Hall in 1904 for the purpose of considering and developing along practical lines such things as might obliterate the evils now arising in the employment of child labor. This committee now has a membership of about 1,500 persons as associate members and about forty-eight persons as active representatives that come from sixteen States of the Union. Its purpose is set forth in section 2 of the bill. The question of child labor has become a serious one, and in nearly every State there have been State organizations and committees formed. This committee has simply been formed for the promotion of such organizations in the various States and Territories of the Union, and in order to make it as representative a body as possible and to put an accent on its national scope they come before Congress seeking a charter, and because the laws of the District of Columbia are so drafted as to make it impossible for the persons seeking this charter to incorporate under these laws, they have to come before Congress for a special charter. The District of Columbia Code provides that a majority of the incorporators must be residents of the District, and it is obvious that a committee composed of residents of several States, the purpose of which is to have representatives in every State, if possible, would be seriously crippled if they were compelled to have their incorporators or a majority of them reside in the District of Columbia. For that reason to conform to this requirement would destroy the widely representative character of They have no intent to make profit. the committee. purely a committee incorporated for the purposes set forth in section 2 of this act, namely, "To promote the welfare of society with respect to the employment of children in gainful occupa-tions," and other purposes. I kope the gentleman will not insist upon his point.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gar-RETT] asks unanimous consent that he may make a brief statement before raising the question of consideration. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, observing the suggestion of the gentleman who has just addressed the House, that he hopes that I will not insist upon this point, it seems proper to say that it is not a point of order or a question of no quorum. It is merely the question of consideration, and of course it is within the power of a majority of the House to order consideration of the bill. I have raised this question of consideration not so much because of objection to this bill itself as because I am opposed to this line of legislation. On every District day, on almost every suspension day, and very frequently when unanimous consents are the order of the hour, bills to incorporate all sorts of institutions and associations are called up and passed without any close consideration by the membership of the House and as a matter of course. Now, we have a carefully considered Code of the District of Columbia which was prepared after careful consideration by a committee many years ago, and passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate, presumably after careful consideration by the membership of both of those bodies, and every institution or association which it was believed might properly be permitted to incorporate as an institution of the District of Columbia was provided for in that general law. Hence the only necessity for coming to Congress with a bill to create one of these incorporations is either to give it the prestige that the passage of a special act would give it or else to confer upon it some power which it can not have under the general laws of the District. Both of those reasons, both of those propositions, to my mind, are objection-If it be desired that there shall be a line of corporations organized for either eleemosynary or charitable or educational purposes, then I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it would be a very easy matter for the District Committee to bring in an amendment to the District Code providing that these organizations might be organized and making these exceptions to the rule that the majority of the members of a corporation organized in the District shall be citizens of the District.

So far as these special cases are concerned, they are objectionable. Each contains, or may contain, powers widely different from the powers granted others. They are passed, as I have stated, without careful consideration, when not half of the membership is upon the floor. Not half of those who are upon the floor now know what the bill is before the House at this moment. Coming to this particular bill, I think there is an objectionable feature in it. One purpose that is set forth in the bill as a purpose of its organization is to bring about legislation. Now, why, Mr. Speaker, should the Congress of the United States incorporate a lobby? I do not use the word lobby as ap-plied to it in any offensive sense. I do not mean to imply that legislation against child labor is improper legislation. In fact, I think it is within the States. But why should Congress organize any association or incorporate any association whose avowed purpose is to bring about certain legislation? For these reasons I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House consider the bill?

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 15.

So the House determined to consider the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker. Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask if the gentleman will yield for the purpose of offering an amendment. I wish to call his attention to this section of the bill. There is a form that is used in these cases that "the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved." This bill pro-This bill provides that "this charter shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal at the pleasure of the Congress of the United States." That language is not only very unusual, but it is very peculiar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. What is the suggestion of the gentleman in the way of an amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The form used is "the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I have no objection, I will state to the gentleman, to accept that as an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the section so that it will read: "That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be passed.

Mr. GARRETT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSIONS FOR CERTAIN OFFICERS OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 23201.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23201) to amend the act approved March 1, 1905, titled "An act to amend section 4 of an act entitled 'An act rela to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' appropriate the property 28, 1901."

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved March 1, 1905, entitled "An act to amend section 4 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting in the first proviso thereof, after the words "assistant superintendent," the words "any inspector."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of ordernot know whether it is good or not-that this bill must be referred to the Union Calendar. We could not tell from the reading of the bill whether it creates new officers

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I will explain to the gentleman just exactly what the bill is intended to cover. This bill does not appropriate any money nor does it create an office. It does not alter the salary of any policeman or of any officer. When the last act regulating the Metropolitan police was passed, the office of inspector was created. The pension laws for policemen never had included that officer as a beneficiary of the pension fund. The provision inserted in the bill provided for a superintendent and officers down, but the word inspector was not put in, and that prevented inspectors from participation in the benefits of the pension fund.

Mr. MANN. Then I submit it ought to go to the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that the bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair, on inspection, finds that the effect of the bill will be to extend the pension law to inspectors. The Chair will take notice, of course, that one-half of the expenditures for the District of Columbia are payable from the Treasury of the United States; and in the opinion of the Chair, unless the Chair is in error-

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The pension fund is made by the men themselves

Mr. SIMS. The pensions are paid by an assessment on the policemen

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The pension fund is created entirely by the policemen themselves. It is not paid by the Government or the District, but out of an assessment levied out of their salaries

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the suggestion as to the question of fact. It is perfectly clear to the Chair that if, under the law, one-half of this amount is payable from the Treasury of the United States that it would be subject to the point of order. If the gentleman from Ohio is correct in his statement-

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I am certain that I am.

The SPEAKER. That this pension fund is made by contributions from

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Every policeman pays a dollar a

The SPEAKER. From the Metropolitan police themselves, why then it seems to the Chair it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure how the decision should go. The gentleman from 'Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] is mistaken, however, in assuming that this money is all paid by contribution from the police officers, or by the retention of a portion of their salaries. The police pension fund is raised in part by money reserved from the salaries of the police officers and in part by money set aside as a result of fines and licenses

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Fines in the police court.

Mr. MANN. I think no portion of it is paid directly out of the Treasury of the United States, but I have not myself assumed that the provision of the rules requiring that there should be consideration in Committee of the Whole was confined to money paid out of the general Treasury belonging to the Government. The same rule obtains as to any money, I suppose, paid out of the Treasury, whether that money is to the credit of the District of Columbia or to the credit of the United States. I may be mistaken in that opinion.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman indulge the Chair for a suggestion, and for an inquiry at the same time?

What seems to be the act that is sought to be amended, section 4, reads as follows:

Sec. 4. That hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to deposit with the Treasurer of the United States, out of receipts from fines in the police court and receipts from dog licenses, a sufficient amount to meet any deficiency in the policemen's fund or firemen's fund.

The Chair understands that is the law now.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That is the law now, and the two words in italics, "any inspector," are the only words that are added.

The SPEAKER. On page 2 of the report (Report 6212) it appears that it is proposed to add the words "any inspector." Now, it seems that heretofore legislation has been enacted which devotes these fines and license receipts to the policemen's fund. The Chair understands that it is not controverted, that the fund otherwise is made up from contributions, under law, from the salaries of the policemen.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. And the fines.

The SPEAKER. Now, this proposes to take from that fund, so made up-which is reenforced by legislation heretofore enacted, devoting these fines to that fund-an additional payment to be made to inspectors,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this results in the end, of course, in taking that much more money out of the Treasury of the United States. The pensions are not arrived at by simply dividing the sum that is in that fund among the police officers, but they are paid a specified amount out of the fund in the Treasury, and when you add to the number who are to be paid, that means that much more money to be paid out of the Treasury. While it may not be exactly in the form of an appropriation, the rule provides that where a bill authorizes payments out of appropriations already made such bill must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think, after looking at clause 3 of the rules and after looking at the section of the law as it is proposed to be amended, that the provision does not come within the rule requiring consideration of the same in Committee of the Whole. Therefore the Chair overrules the

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I call for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. We should like to know what it is about. Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer a suggestion or two in relation to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?
Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. In relation to the form of the bill. I have no objection at all to the purpose of the bill, but I do object, as I have frequently heretofore objected, to this hypodermic process of amending laws. This bill provides that the words "any inspector" shall be injected into the body of an act that was passed several years ago. Now, we do not provide by law for a codification of the laws of the District of Columbia oftener than perhaps once in thirty years. The public must of necessity depend upon private publications, and the original act must be carried on just as it was, and this act must also be incorporated into any volume of the laws of the District of Columbia. It is an expensive and cumbersome method, and I think the only proper way to amend an act or a section is to incorporate the section as amended. I believe there ought to be a rule of the House making any bill subject to a point of order that undertakes to amend an existing statute by this I have an amendment that I desire to offer to the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Is it the same that appears on page 23 of the report? If it is the same, we have no objection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to put in the words "any inspector" that properly apply in the original act, so that it will be carried forward and will save the expense of publication and embarrassment and difficulty and time in looking up the law. I want to insert at the end of the act the provision with the words in it "any inspector.".

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the bill the following:

"So that said act shall read as follows:

"Suc. 4. That hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to deposit with the Treasurer of the United States, out of receipts from fines in the police court and receipts from dog licenses, a sufficient amount to meet any deficiency in the policemen's fund or firemen's fund: Provided, That the chief engineer of the fire department and all other officers of said department of and above the rank of captain, the superintendent, assistant superintendent, any inspector, any captain or lieutenant of police, in case of retirement as now provided by law, shall receive relief not exceeding $100 per month; and in case of the death from injury or disease of any member of the police force or fire department, if he be unmarried and leave a dependent mother, who is a widow, the same shall be for her relief during the period of widowhood, or until such children reach the age of 16 years: Provided, That in no case shall the amount paid to such dependent mother or widow exceed $50 per month, nor shall the amount paid for a child exceed $25 per month."

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman intends to amend the act by inserting in section 4 of the act

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; to insert at the end of the bill "so that the act as amended will read as follows," setting out the amended act. Section 4 of the first act has been repealed by an amendment in 1905. That is an independent act, and this bill provides for the amendment of that amendatory act.

Mr. MANN. This enacts and amends both acts?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; this bill undertakes to amend section 4 of the amendatory act.

Mr. MANN. This does not seem to me to be such a pressing matter, and the gentleman from Ohio might withdraw the bill long enough to put it in proper shape.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I do not wish to withdraw the bill, and I concur with the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana that the law should show plainly what it now is.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was considered; and the amendment was agreed

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PENALTY FOR SALE OR GIFT OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS TO MINORS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 23556) prohibiting the purchase or procurement, sale, gift, or disposition of intoxicating liquors to minors by unlicensed persons.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person not having a license in any manner to purchase or procure for, sell, give, or dispose of to, or aid or assist in any manner in such purchase or procurement for, sale, gift, or disposition to any person under the age of 21 years, any intoxicating liquor as the same is defined in the act of Congress entitled "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1893, except for necessary use in the case of illness when furnished by a parent or guardian or duly licensed physician, or upon the prescription of a duly licensed physician.

duly licensed physician, or upon the prescription of a duly licensed physician.

SEC 2. That any person violating the provisions of this act shall, on conviction thereof on prosecution by information filed in the police court of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel or any of his assistants, be fined not less than $50 nor more than $100, or be imprisoned in the District jail or workhouse for not more than six months for each and every offense.

SEC 3. That nothing in this act contained shall be held to repeal or abrogate the provision of the said act approved March 3, 1893, or amendments thereof prohibiting the sale, gift, or disposition of intoxicating liquors to any minor by persons having a license to sell intoxicating liquors.

Mr. MANN. What is this bill?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention to one provision of the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] to explain the bill.

What does the gentleman from New York wish? Mr. PERKINS. What I would like to ask is this: This bill says that it shall be unlawful for any person to sell or give to any minor any intoxicating liquor. Do you mean by that if a person .20 years old is invited to dine in the District of Columbia it would be unlawful to give him a glass of wine without permission of his guardian? That is the way this bill reads.

Mr. SIMS. 'This bill is the Commissioners' bill-

Mr. PERKINS. I do not care whether it is a Commissioners' bill or anybody else's bill.

Mr. SIMS. It was introduced by Mr. Babcock, chairman of the District Committee, and the conditions requiring its enactment are fully set out in letters embraced in the report by the Commissioners and chief of police. It seems that the trouble is that the law prohibiting the sale or giving intoxicating liquors to minors applies only to those who are licensed dealers, and parties have been found not licensed who are mean enough to buy intoxicants and let minors have them, and to such persons the law does not apply because they are not licensed dealers, and the object of the bill is to cure that defect. I do not think it is intended that a parent should not be permitted to give a glass of wine to his children who are under 20 years of age, or anything of that sort.

Mr. PERKINS. That is the way the bill reads.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think that was intended, and I do not think the committee would have any objection to an amendment making that clear if it is not.

Mr. PERKINS. It seems to me that we can fairly ask the committee that instead of reporting a Commissioners' bill, which is very often very badly drawn, the committee themselves when presenting it for passage have it in such shape as may commend it. It is not easy on the floor of the House to prepare amendments that should be carefully drawn. Of course this was not intended, because the intention would be preposterous, but under the wording any man in the District of Columbia who invites a person under 21 years to dinner or to any entertainment and gives him a glass of claret has committed a misdemeanor. Of course the committee does not want that, and I think the committee ought to see to it that the bill is so amended that the evil which is sought to be reached shall be reached, and by the sense of its terminology it shall not be a bill which, if enforced, would be an absurdity.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, this bill no doubt was considered by the corporation counsel, by the major of police, and, as far as the committee is concerned, so far as I know, we are perfectly satisfied with the language, because we do not think the court, in enforcing this law, will ever mete out punishment in a case which it is clear was not intended by the law to be embraced.

Mr. PERKINS. No; but does not the gentleman admit that under the wording of the bill that would be an offense, and that those guilty will have to throw themselves upon the court and say that such an interpretation and such an end was not desired by the committee, and will have to ask the court to correct the inaccuracies of the bill? I do not think that is good legislation.

Mr. SIMS. This is an amendment of the law or addition to the existing law, and when all the acts are read together I do not think the court will have any doubt about the meaning of Congress in this legislation. I do not care to offer any amendment myself.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. It is not an amendment of an act.

Mr. PERKINS. It is an original act.

Mr. SIMS. The intention is to apply to others than licensed dealers. The law as it now is does not apply except to licensed dealers, as I am informed.

Mr. MANN. Does the law now prohibit the sale or giving away of intoxicating liquor by any person who does not have a license?

Mr. SIMS. Only by licensed dealers.

Mr. MANN. Licensed dealers are not prohibited. Does not the law provide that no one else shall give away or sell liquor to any person, whether he is a minor or an adult?

Mr. SIMS. That is not my understanding. The law applies only to licensed dealers. This is intended to apply to anyone.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman must be mistaken. No one would take out a license and pay for it to sell liquor if he could sell liquor without a license. Is there any law forbidding the sale or giving away of intoxicating liquors unless there is a license taken out?

Mr. SIMS. I understand, now, that the law prohibits licensed dealers from selling or giving to minors, but there is no law preventing those who are not licensed from doing it. That is the object of this act.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman does not answer the question, and it is a very plain one, I think. Is there no law now for-bidding any person from selling or giving away intoxicating liquors unless a license be first taken out?

Mr. SIMS. As to the revenue law or that feature of it, I am not advised.

Mr. MANN. That is not a revenue law, it is a police law.

Mr. SIMS. A license is a revenue. Mr. MANN. Licensing is a police law.

Mr. SIMS. And also a revenue. You have to pay a fee for it.

Mr. MANN. Very well. Does the gentleman think that any-one here in the District would take out a license and pay a large sum for it for the purpose of conducting the saloon business if he could have a saloon without a license?

Mr. SIMS. Of course not. Mr. MANN. Then there i Then there is a law prohibiting an unlicensed person from selling or giving away intoxicating liquors to any person. Now, what is the object of this?

Mr. SIMS. I would say against giving it away. I have never heard of any such law.

Mr. MANN. That is the statute everywhere. Mr. SIMS. A person could not become a dealer without a

Mr. MANN. The form of the statute, in most places at least—and I think the same form is used here—is that no person without a license is permitted to sell or give away intoxicating liquors

Mr. SIMS. I have never seen any law that prevented the giving away.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; that is the form and the language used, I dare say, in the gentleman's own State. It is so in the city of New York and in every other large city of the country. Mr. SIMS. About giving it away?
Mr. MANN. About giving it away.
Mr. SIMS. Well, I am not advised as to that.
Mr. MANN. Well, that is the fact: the gentle

Well, that is the fact; the gentleman will find that to be the fact here.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that the law in our State—the State of Tennessee, from which the gentleman and myself come—prevents the giving away of liquor to a minor, but does not prevent the giving away of liquor to an adult.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The District of Columbia does have a law making it a crime for the sale of intoxicating liquor to a person without a license, and if the penalties for the sale of liquor are adequate I do not see any purpose in passing this law. Of course, if it is a crime to sell intoxicating liquors without a license in the District of Columbia, it is as much a crime to sell liquors to a minor as to an adult, and if the penalty is as great under the general license law making it a crime to sell liquor without a license as the penalty described here, it seems this legislation is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. SIMS. Without having gone into the statute in full this law was asked for by the Commissioners, and, as shown by the letter of the major of police, it is absolutely needed, and if they need it they know what the effect of existing law is and its administration. The committee is simply giving that which the chief of police and Commissioners say is absolutely necessary.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I know that there is a statute making it a crime for any person to sell intoxicating liquors in the District of the commissioners. trict of Columbia without a license, and it carries with it quite severe penalties, and that law applies to minors as well as to adults. Now, the license statute makes it a crime to sell to minors even by licensed people, and the general provision of the statute making it necessary to take out a license imposes penalties for sale without a license to anybody, including children as well as adults.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit? I ask the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee. Is not this the condition of affairs which this bill is designed to meet? At present, under the law of the District, or applicable to the District, a dealer in liquors can not sell to a minor, even a licensed dealer; but a minor, not being able to go and purchase himself, gets some friend who is an adult as agent for him to go and purchase, and is not this bill intended to prevent such a practice as that?

Mr. SIMS. That is exactly what the letter from the chief of police here says, and that is the reason for this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a pure matter of speculation. It would seem that the law prohibiting the sale of liquor to a minor would cover the question now either directly or indirectly.

Mr. SIMS. Let me state to the gentleman or, in other words, read what Major Sylvester says on that subject, and I invite the gentleman's attention to that letter of Major Sylvester dated December 7, 1906.

He says:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 7, 1906.

Washington, December 7, 1906.

Hon. Henry L. West,
Commissioner, District of Columbia.

Dear Sir: There is provision in law against the selling of intoxicating liquors to minors, but, despite the existence of such, the attention of the police is called to cases of boys under the influence of drink. Investigation of these cases has convinced those charged with the duty that they do not result from purchases made by minors, but that intoxicants are procured by persons of lawful age at the solicitation and for the use of those who are forbidden sales under the law. In one instance several boys had robbed a place where liquors were sold in order to procure drink. The youths were arrested, taken to the juvenile court, reprimanded, and placed on probation. Enough is known to convince me that there are those so degraded that they will purchase for minors' use, and I respectfully beg leave to recommend that the existing law be so amended as to make it a punishable offense for any person to buy, purchase in any manner, or procure inoxicating liquors for the use of any other person under 21 years of age, except in case of illness or injury, and then such to be furnished by a parent or guardian, or on the prescription of a duly registered physician.

Very respectfully,

RICHARD SYLVESTER,

Major and Superintendent.

RICHARD SYLVESTER, Major and Superintendent.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That reason is satisfactory, and now I will support the bill even if there is no necessity for it, because I do not think there can be too many laws, if properly enforced, to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to minors.

Mr. GARRETT. As a matter of fact, there is not any real necessity for the word "sale" in the bill. They are not allowed to sell it now. But there is necessity for the word "gift."

Mr. SIMS. It does not hurt. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and

On motion of Mr. Sims, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 6578) which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] calls up the bill S. 6578, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1895, and the act amendatory thereof approved June 20, 1906, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as

June 20, 1906, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 10. No person shall sell or offer for sale anywhere in the District of Columbia any provisions or produce or commodities of any kind for a weight or measure greater than the actual or true weight or measure thereof; and all provisions, produce, or commodities of any kind shall be weighed by scales, weights, or balances, or measured in measures duly tested and sealed by the sealer or an assistant sealer of weights and measures: Provided, That berries, when offered for sale in an original package or basket containing a standard measure, may be sold in said package or basket containing a standard measure, may be sold in said package or basket without the same having been first tested and sealed; but in no case shall said basket be refilled for use in the sale of berries or produce of any kind whatsoever: And provided further, That poultry and vegetables, usually sold by the head or bunch, may be offered for sale and sold in other manner than by weight or measure; but in all cases where the person intending to purchase shall so desire and request, poultry shall be weighed, as hereinbefore prescribed: And provided turther, That scales reported not in use shall be sealed down, and said seal shall not be broken except by authority of the sealer of weights and measures."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker. I wish to offer an amend-

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 3, after the word "shall," insert the words "when sold by weight or measure."

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, we accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALEXANDER PLACE AND POPLAR STREET.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 19568, and I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to abandon Alexander place and that portion of Poplar street dedicated to the District of Columbia in the subdivision of a part of Lincoln, recorded in book, county, 18, page 35 of the records of the surveyor's office; the area so abandoned to revert to the present owner of all the lots in said subdivision.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Olcott] for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to vacate Alexander place and Poplar street in the subdivision of Lincoln. These streets only exist on paper. They never have been made, and the Commissioners and the property owners adjoining are both very desirous of laying out other streets. Of course, no further subdivision and no other map as to the treatment of this particular property can be made without the consent of the Commissioners, and it does not in any way interfere with the present extension of highways contemplated, but it seems to be desirable on account of the beauty of the city of Washington and for other purposes

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. OLCOTT. I will.
Mr. PERKINS. Is the title of this land abandoned now in the District of Columbia?

Mr. OLCOTT. Yes.
Mr. PERKINS. How did it acquire title?
Mr. OLCOTT. It acquired title by the gift of the property owners-by the making of the plat as to the way they expected

Mr. PERKINS. They did not buy the land?
Mr. OLCOTT. They did not buy the land. It was dedicated originally. I ask for a vote on the bill.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Why is this property being ceded back to the owners?

Mr. OLCOTT. For the reason that the Commissioners believe that it will be beneficial for that section of the city to put the streets in another place. No improvements have been made; nothing has been done except the mere filing of a map dedicating certain portions of the property to public streets. is desirable to change the plan and to put the streets in another part of the property

Mr. FITZGERALD. Have the owners dedicated land for the new streets?

Mr. OLCOTT. They have not done so yet, but the property could not be subdivided and they could not make use of it without providing streets that would be satisfactory to the Commissioners

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do they intend to dedicate the land or will the city be compelled to condemn it?

Mr. OLCOTT. If they did not intend to file a new plat and map of new streets, but really intended to keep the property exactly as it was, there is no power in the Commissioners to insist upon a change without condemnation of the streets.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not put a provision in this bill and having it effective upon the dedication of other lands required for the opening of streets through this plat?

Mr. OLCOTT. The Commissioners state in their report that they are in favor of conceding to the property owners who own this large amount of land, but desire to plat it and map it up, that portion of the property formerly dedicated for streets. It is so much to the property owners' interest to have this mapped into lots that the Commissioners feel they were entirely protected by the fact that they will have to pass upon any proposed dedication or disposition of streets, and they ask that this bill should be passed in this way because it is a part of the general plan to improve this particular section.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.
On motion of Mr. Olcott, a motion to reconsider the vote by HIGHWAY BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC RIVER.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate joint resolution 76.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 76) providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge and approaches across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C.

at Washington, D. C.

Resolved, etc., That the time for completing the construction of the highway bridge and approaches across the Potomac River, authorized by section 12 of the act of Congress approved February 12, 1901, entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," as amended by the District of Columbia appropriation act approved July 1, 1902, and as amended by joint resolution providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge and approaches across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C., approved February 18, 1905, and as amended by joint resolution providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge and approaches across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C., approved February 19, 1906, be, and is hereby, extended to June 30, 1907.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would like the gentleman to make some explanation of this resolution.

make some explanation of this resolution.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that the Engineer Department of the Army not only approved, but particularly asked for. So far as that department is concerned, the utmost expedition, as I understand, that was practicable has been made, and the Chief of Engineers makes a specific report to us that the contractors have done as well as it was possible for them to do. In his letter reporting upon this matter, General Mackenzie stated that complications arose relative to the peculiar structure of that bridge which made it imperatively necessary to have the time extended so that proper work be done upon the approaches of the bridge. It was thought advisable by the Chief of Engineers to extend this time because, as he has stated, the delay was not the fault of the contractors.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman yield to me?
Mr. OLCOTT. Certainly.
Mr. HEPBURN. Would it not be wise, in order to save the time of the Congress, in view of the many extensions they have had, that we should provide at this time for certain additional extensions in order to meet the contingencies as they arise. it not be wise for the gentleman to amend his bill so that after the day fixed for this extension he should have language something like this: "And another extension until the 1st day of August;" and again a third section giving another extension. It will save time. I think there is a penalty the contractors are liable to. I suppose that this penalty or this forfeiture might have been made long ago, but time after time these gentlemen have come in asking extensions, and they have got them. This is the fourth extension, I think, that has been made. Each time it saved these gentlemen from the penalty. Now, I believe they have played with this House long enough; they have played with this legislation long enough and with their obligations under their contract, and some gentlemen, who are contractors with the Government, who habitually fail to comply with their contracts, ought to be brought up with a round turn and an example made

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute?
Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.
Mr. TAWNEY. Has the gentleman visited this structure?
Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are you acquainted with the fact that it has been practically impossible for them to find a foundation for one of the concrete piers necessary in the construction of this bridge?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir.
Mr. TAWNEY. I will state to the gentleman that I was down there only a short time ago, and it is a fact that it has been impossible, thus far, to get a solid foundation for one of the concrete piers; and they are working at it now. The difficulty in securing the foundation has caused the delay.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do know this, Mr. Speaker, that there have been two or three extensions. I assume that those extensions have been for such time as has been asked for. These gentlemen have fixed their own time, and they are engineers, or they have engineers in their employ, I have no doubt; but there is some other reason than this failure to find a proper foundation or a foundation that would suit them. I know enough about engineering, without knowing anything professionally, to know that engineers overcome difficulties of this kind, and that if there had been zeal probably they would have overcome the difficulties and that without coming to this House not once, but twice, three times, and now perhaps the fourth time that they are seeking for this extension.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the report that we have received from the Chief Engineer of the Army satisfied us so entirely that the delay in the construction of this bridge was not the fault of the contractors, and that they have exercised reasonable zeal in the prosecution of the work, it seemed to us, and it seems to me now, that we must adopt that recommendation and pass this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the The SPEAKER. The Senate joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Division!
The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 10.
Mr. HEPBURN. A parliamentary inquiry. How many constitute a quorum?

The SPEAKER. One hundred and ninety-three, the Chair believes-about that.

So the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Olcott, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

W AND ADAMS STREETS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 5119) authorizing the extension of W and Adams streets NW., with House amendments thereto, disagreed to by the Senate, and a conference asked.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the House insist upon its amendments to this bill and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, and Mr. SIMS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the District of Columbia has no further business to offer for the consideration of the House to-day.

LARVAN GORDON.

By unanimous consent the Committee on Private Land Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 5869) for the relief of Larvan Gordon, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. Brumm, until Wednesday, January 16, on account of important

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill; and pending that motion I desire to call attention to the manner in which the time of the committee was consumed on Friday last, and to state that it has been impossible for the members of the subcommittee, in the time originally limited, properly to present the bill to the Committee of the Whole, and I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be extended two hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill; and pending that motion asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be extended two hours. Is there objection?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, is that in accordance with an understanding with the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is in accordance with an understanding with several of the members of the committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. How is the time to be divided? Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The time is to be equally divided? The SPEAKER. . The time to be equally divided between the two sides. Is there objection to the modified request?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. SMITH of Iowa was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, with Mr. Mann in the chair.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, by agreement with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] we now yield an hour and a quarter to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer], one hour to be charged to me and fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. . In accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] is recognized for one hour and fifteen minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I hope again, as on a previous occasion, to violate the accustomed rule when the House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union considering an appropriation bill by sticking as closely as possible to the bill under consideration.

Since the fortifications appropriation bill has been in this House there have been such turbulent times here as to indicate that we ought to have other appropriations for other than mere seacoast defenses; but I shall confine my remarks mainly to the bill, if possible.

This bill, as I understand it, carries appropriations for fortifications amounting to $5,414,883, to be expended the next fiscal

I shall speak only as to the policy adopted, or, rather, as to the lack of any plans or policy, in making provision for the defense of our insular possessions. I will not do this in any spirit of criticism of my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee, radical as may be the views I hold in opposition to parts of the bill.

I understand a general conservative policy of making appropriations for our insular possessions has obtained for some years, and this is some excuse for the committee's present

There are some of my colleagues on the committee, and they are, perhaps, not confined to one party, who oppose any defensive fortifications for the Philippines, because they desire that our sovereignty over them should be surrendered to some foreign oriental power, or to the Filipino inhabitants, or failing either of these events that they may be left so exposed to foreign invasion as to fall an easy prey to any first comer.

There are others who believe in homeopathic appropriations, looking to a possible time when our western insular possessions may become sufficiently defensively fortified as to secure them from successful attack by any foe, they relying on war not coming in the meantime with a maritime power to take them

With those opposed to any appropriations for the defense of these islands and with those who favor gradual or piecemeal appropriations for them, looking to possible defensive fortifications being completed at some indefinite time in the future, I equally differ. I see little practical difference between these two classes of believers; the merit may be with the former. The conservative in an emergency always becomes the most dangerous. He stands for a friend to a cause, but his acts are too wavering and halting to be relied on to meet an impending crisis when the cause is endangered. These two classes unite in preventing proper fortifications in the insular possessions.

shall also, at the close of my remarks, have something to say about the importance of fortifying the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay between Capes Henry and Charles. The bill carries no appropriation for this purpose.

I will not spend much time with the general details of the bill, as I am satisfied that it is as good as can reasonably be expected under all the circumstances, save in two important respects, which I shall try to point out. I will first have something to say with reference to the geography of our country, or rather of the extent of our territories and of their exposed situation in case of war.

It has long been a proverb that the sun never sets on British soil; this is now equally true as to the domain of the United States, and it was nearly true before the acquisition of the Hawaiian and Philippine islands. When it is sunrise on the eastern coast of Maine the sun is just setting in the Philippine Archipelago of the day previous.

The longitude of the most eastern coast of Maine is 67° west of Greenwich and that of the western coast of Attoo Island is 172° 30′ east (or 187° 30′ counted west from Greenwich); that of Honolulu, Hawaii, is 157° 52′ west; of Manila, P. I., 120° 58′ east; of San Juan, P.-R. (the city located the farthest east of any in the United States), is 66° 07′ 28″; of Washington City, 77° west; of San Francisco, Cal., 122° 22′ 30″ west; of Cape Mendocino, California, 124° 24′ 25″, and of Cape Blanco, Oregon, 124° 33′ 30″ west; of Cape Flattery, Washington, 124° 44′ 05″ west, and of Sitka, Alaska, 135° 20′ 20″ west.

The most eastern point of any of the States is West Quoddy Head light, Maine (66° 57′ 04″), and the most western is Cape Flattery, Washington. The most eastern point of any of the United States possessions is Reef Point, Culebra, off the east coast of Porto Rico, 65° 13′ 15″ west longitude, and the most western part of the line of the Philippine possessions is 116° east longitude, and the east line of the Philippine cession under the treaty of Paris (1898) is 127° east longitude. The western point of the Philippines is West Balabac Island, 116° 55′ east, and the most eastern point is Bakillin Point, Mindanao, 126° 30'.

It may be observed that, measured longitudinally, the most easterly line of the Philippine possessions is almost exactly (180°) halfway around the world, measured either way, from the east coast of the United States.

Even excluding the Philippine possessions, it may be a matter of some surprise to find the center, longitudinally, of the United States is not within any of the States of the Union. The distance between Eastport, Me. (67° west) and Attoo, Alaska (172° 30′ east), is 120° 30′, and the one-half the distance is 60° 15′, which, added to the 67°, gives 127° 15′ as the center line of longitude between the two extreme limits. This line is 4° 51′ 40″ (or 292 geographical miles) west of San Francisco, Cal., in the Pacific Ocean, and 2° 31' (about 150 miles) outside of Cape Flattery, Washington, the most western point of any including all of their island possessions, is about the line  $155^{\circ}$  30' of west longitude, almost (within  $3^{\circ}$ ) the longitude of Honolulu and  $65^{\circ}$  45' east of the longitude of Tokyo, Japan.

The Philippine Islands lie southeast of the continent of Asia, but westward of Japan, and form a part of the great East India Archipelago, and they are connected by three isthmuses, partly submerged, with Borneo, and the Sulu Sea lies between two of The islands are surrounded on the north and west by the China Sea, on the east by the Pacific Ocean, and on the south by the Sea of Celebes. The Sulu and the Celebes seas are largely, and the smaller seas of Mindanao, Jolo, Surigao, Visayan, etc., are wholly, inclosed by the islands.

Mindanao, next to the largest island of the group-36,292 square miles in area-extends farthest east and south of the larger islands, Paragua the farthest west of the larger islands, and Luzon, the largest and most important-40,969 square miles in area, larger than the State of Ohio-the farthest north of the large islands. The archipelago is only 500 miles at the nearest part from the continent of Asia and 1,000 miles from Australia, and from the nearest point of land on the northwest to the China coast it is only 230 kilometers, but the nearest land on the north is the island of Formosa. The area of the islands, so for as surveyed, is 115,026 square miles.

The total number of islands in the Philippine group belonging to the United States, so far as found and enumerated, is 3,141, and 1,668 of them have been listed by name and 1,473 are, so far as known, without names. Islands are still arising from the seas abounding.

The eastern boundary line of our Philippine possessions is 55° 30' westward of Attoo Island and it is 110° 36' 30"-almost 7,000 miles-farther west than San Francisco, our most important Pacific coast city and harbor for ships. Manila, or Manila Bay, is, longitudinally, distant from San Francisco 116° 38′ 30″, or 7,000 miles. The true distance to be navigated is vastly greater.

From Tokyo to Manila the distance is comparatively very short, and the Aleutian Islands and other portions of Alaska are easier of access and by shorter lines from Japan or the continent of Asia than from our nearest seaboard harbor possessing a naval base.

The following table, prepared at my request by the Hydrographic Office, Washington, D. C., may be of interest and furnish data for deductions by the curious:

	C. W. S. C.	4 (5.17)	THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE

The great statesman, Daniel Webster, in describing the universality and almost limitless extent of the British Empire, exclaimed that-

Its morning drum beat follows the sun in its course, keeps pace with the hours, and circles the earth with one continuous strain of the martial airs of England.

So we may, dropping the martial figure, now exclaim of the almost boundless domain of our yet young American Republie that:

The sun of heaven never ceases through all the hours of the day to shine on her possessions and to flash its golden rays on her blood-consecrated flag of freedom, illumining its starry and purified folds wherever unfurled, typifying her resplendent history and glorifying that liberty of law guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States of America. [Applause.]

Passing from the geography of the Philippine Islands, we find their native civilized inhabitants, so far as a census has been or probably can be made, number 6,987,686; it is generally reported that there are 7,000,000 Christianized Filipinos in these islands. It is estimated by some authorities that there are also in the islands 2,000,000 people still belonging to the wild tribes. The common estimate is 10,000,000 of inhabitants of all kinds in the islands.

The importance of the islands on account of their varied tropical and other productions has been from time to time discussed here in connection with tariff legislation, and so as to the importance of trade and commerce, foreign and domestic, with and on account of the islands.

In making up the cost to the United States of these islands so far, it may be summed up as consisting of the larger part of the material cost of the Spanish war, the $20,000,000 paid to Spain in money under Article III of the treaty of Paris (1898) somewhat in the nature of a purchase consideration, the cost of maintaining a Philippine war which broke out at Manila in February, 1899, and the further cost of occupying the islands continuously with the civil, military, and naval powers of the Union and in maintaining peace and order and in efforts to pacify, organize, educate, civilize, and Christianize the inhabitants, If the whole of such cost in money could be segregated from connected expenses of our Government since April, 1898, when the war with Spain broke out, it would dizzy us with its enormity. The acquisition of the little 100 by 40 mile island of Porto Rico could have been purchased at so much an acre with a small fraction of such cost. It is, however, the only near-by gem or locket the nation wears dangling around its neck in token of its achievements by sea and land in the Spanish war, the only war that ever arose between nations solely because one of them demanded of the other that it should surrender its sovereignty over an important part of its domain because of its cruelty or inhumanity toward its own subjects residing thereon. The cost in sorrow, suffering, tears, and blood I here eliminate.

abandon all our distant island possessions and transfer the sovereignty over them to a yet to be formed independent nation, or given them to some other power, or surrender them to the first foe that seeks them, or we shall have to effectively fortify them. To thus fortify these distant island possessions is our only security against attack. Leaving them as they are now invites war and certain national humiliation in our own eyes and in the eyes of all the world. No nation accounted a war power among the powers of the earth now holds important possessions so much exposed to capture for want of proper defensive works as the United States. Their geographical situation and exposed condition invite attack and insult from any and all the maritime nations of the earth. When war comes it will be too late to repair the neglect. Treasure, energy, heroism, and sacrifice of human life will then prove useless. A fleet from an existed human life will then prove useless. A fleet from an oriental third-class power could possess Honolulu and Manila practically human life will then prove useless. without real resistance, and when taken the inhabitants of the islands might form armies to aid in holding them. It is said there are now in Hawaii enough Japanese men, many of them soldiers who fought in the recent war with Russia, to constitute a very large army corps, to say nothing of the native and other inhabitants who would prove unfriendly to us. So of the Philippines. Should we lose the Philippine Islands to an energetic enemy, Alaska would also fall an easy prey to him. With these parts of our domain once in the hands of an enemy, a long, costly, and bloody war in a distant part of the world would ensue, with all its attendant evil consequences.

At the rate and in the manner we are proceeding and proposing to proceed to fortify Honolulu and Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, and Manila and Manila Bay, in the Philippines, should the patchwork hold good from year to year, we would not succeed in effectively fortifying either place in twenty-five years. My own belief is that if Congress should, without definite plans or purposes, continue to pursue the policy of appropriations so far pursued and proposed to be continued by this bill in relation to fortifying these islands, they never would be fortified effectively, and we would throw away many millions of dollars more than it would cost to properly fortify them. We should listen to the recommendations of the President of the United States, of the Secretary of War, and of the distinguished boards and officers of our Army and Navy who have so carefully and maturely considered the necessity and methods of fortifying these exposed places.

Some say we may rely on the Navy to protect us from disaster, and that we can soon summon an army from the yeo-manry of this country. If this were a safe reliance, we should not depend upon it, but it is not. We have no present superior Navy, and there is no assurance that we will have one in any reasonable time; but if we had such a Navy, we would not keep it halfway around the world looking for trouble. The Atlantic coast would claim some of it, if not the principal part of it. Some of those who oppose the fortification of our distant possessions would be the first to cry out against sending our Navy to protect them, and if war came would be the last to consent to its being sent to defend them.

The Army, both regular and volunteer, will do its duty in any crisis, but we have had enough experience in maintaining an army on a war footing in distant parts; and so of the cost of doing so.

We have done much for the Philippines besides merely taking and holding possession of them for over eight years and enforcing peace and order among the discordant inhabitants. We have inaugurated and maintained therein, partly under military control, but largely through a civil administration, a form of republican government under Governor-General William H. Taft and his successors, all of whom have shown rare executive ability and have conscientiously done all that was possible to inculcate a better and higher civilization than was ever known in the islands in all their history.

We have, on the overthrow of the insurrection of February, 1899, so pacified insurrectos as to be able to intrust them with the duty of aiding in preserving the public peace and protecting life and property. We have established public schools in the islands, and with teachers from the States we have given the inhabitants the opportunity for instruction and enlightenment.

We have successfully revised the unjust tax system found there, which imposed upon the poor a very large part of the expenses of maintaining the government, and in its stead we have installed a modern system of taxation which equalizes the burdens on all citizens alike.

We have substituted in the islands for a fluctuating medium of exchange a stable currency and a settled monetary system.

Our Government has built roads, erected lines of telegraph, built light-houses, and constructed harbor works, erected schoolhouses, and inaugurated a postal service which largely meets the requirements of business and personal correspondence; also established a postal-savings bank to protect the earnings of the poor

We have created municipal governments in the islands which are now administered by officials elected by the people. The organized provinces are now presided over by governors, also elected by the people, and by two officials appointed by the chief executive of the islands. A judicial system has been put into successful operation, which gives the people an administration of justice that protects the rich and poor alike, native as well as foreigner. Our Government has purchased the landed properties of the religious orders, and has given the tenants and other occupants of land the opportunity and the right to, on easy terms, acquire titles to lands; and it has established a criminal and civil code of laws which secures to those accused of crime the right to be informed of the charges against them and the right to a speedy public trial according to the general principles of the English common law, and to suitors fair and impartial trials, generally before native judges. Freedom of speech and the press now exist in the islands, and the people have a right to assemble peaceably and petition for the redress of grievances; and their inhabitants now enjoy, under protective laws, the free exercise and enjoyment of religious worship and Shall it ever be said that our Government has done and accomplished all this, and vastly more, in these islands only to shamefully and in abject humiliation abandon them all for want of the courage and ability to protect her own occupancy of them? Do we not owe it to our Americanism and to our progressive character as a civilized and civilizing nation to maintain and make secure what we have so far accomplished?

It is to avert the necessity and the great cost of having to maintain a navy in the Orient and the danger of having to summon an army to war that I favor present modern fortifications at the principal places named. It will prove economical to do this. And it may, and I believe it will, save us from war and grievous humiliation in the near future. We should not boast of being a war power among the powers of the world until we have protected our country from the most obvious dangers from the other powers, even from the most obvious dangers from the other powers, even from the most insignificant of them. President Roosevelt's views on the necessity of preparing for war to avoid it and on the necessary economy in doing so, and especially the practical example which he cites in his last annual message, are well worth our attention. I read:

tion. I read:

The United States Navy is the surest guarantor of peace which this country possesses. It is earnestly to be wished that we would profit by the teachings of history in this matter. A strong and wise people will study its own failures no less than its triumphs, for there is wisdom to be learned from the study of both, of the mistake as well as of the success. For this purpose nothing could be more instructive than a rational study of the war of 1812, as it is told, for instance, by Captain Mahan. There was only one way in which that war could have been avoided. If during the preceding twelve years a navy relatively as strong as that which this country now has had been built up, and an army provided relatively as good as that which the country now has, there never would have been the slightest necessity of fighting the war; and if the necessity had arisen, the war would under such circumstances have ended with our speedy and overwhelming triumph. But our people during those twelve years refused to make any preparations whatever regarding either the Army or the Navy. They saved a million or so dollars by so doing; and in mere money paid a hundred fold for each million they thus saved during the three years of war which followed—a war which brought untold suffering upon our people, which at one time threatened the gravest national disaster, and which, in spite of the necessity of waging it, resulted merely in what was in effect a drawn battle, while the balance of defeat and triumph was almost even.

CUBA.

As to Cuba, that bright gem of the Antilles, where all the cause of the war originated, where the reconcentrado policy of Weyler went into effect and caused thousands of noncombatants to be starved to death, or to die of incident disease caused thereby, so shocking the sense of civilized people throughout the world, and especially in our own recently redeemed, disenthralled and regenerated Union, that our country demanded that Spain should relinquish Cuba and her West Indian possessions at once and forever. When this demand was made good by requiring Spain to renounce her sovereignty over Guba and Cuban waters, though to no other nation, it was stipulated that the United States should have the right to some sort of temporary occupancy thereof, taking upon themselves "obligations which by the fact of occupancy international law imposes upon them for the protection of life and property."

(Who knows of any international law imposing obligations on a country, who, without right or title, or claim or pretense of acquiring any right or title thereto, assumes to occupy a foreign country?)

As a further anomaly in international matters, Article XVI of the treaty provided that "at the end of said occupancy they [the United States] will advise the government that may be established in the island that it should accept the same obligations," whatever they might be.

In fulfillment of these treaty provisions we occupied Cuba with a sort of half-and-half military and civil occupancy, surrendering it to a so-called "Cuban Republic" on May 20, 1902, after a more than three years' occupancy. Besides certain provisions ratifying acts of the United States during our occupancy, Cuba assuming the payment of such debts on account of the occupancy as we had contracted and not paid, and agreeing "to sell or lease to the United States the lands necessary for coaling or naval stations" and to reserve the question of the title of the Island of Pines for future adjustment by treaty, an appendix to the Cuban constitution embodied the provisions of an act of Congress, approved March 2, 1901 (sometimes called the Platt amendment), which provided that the United States should enjoy a certain right of intervention, in language following:

ABTICLE III. That the Government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the Government of Cuba.

This left the United States without sovereign rights in Cuba or over its government and shorn of anything but a duty, self-imposed, to act as a police to any weak or impotent government called a republic that might be established. This duty, being without time limit, will obtain through all time, unless the obligation be broken.

The forerunner of this article, and on the same line, was the section (called often the Teller provision) in the joint resolution of Congress dated April 20, 1898, demanding that Spain relinquish her authority and government of the island of Cuba and in Cuban waters, which was in the following language:

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

This declaration illustrates the danger of making proclamations of virtue, of purpose, or of policy when on the eve of war or of any great event or action. Existing conditions should not be complicated by previous pledges, promises, or proclamations.

We have had to attempt to intervene once already to uphold what promised to be a good administration of a republican form of government established and put in operation under a written constitution, with a distinguished Cuban patriotic citizen—T. Estrada Palma—at its head. This attempted intervention to uphold President Palma's administration of course failed, and on the 29th of September, 1906, in virtue of said Article III, the President of the United States, through the Secretary of War, Mr. Taft, established a provisional government in Cuba under the authority of the United States, and it still exists.

We sent an army of about 6,000 men to Cuba, a large part of which is still at old Camp Columbia (Marianao), near Habana—a camp I participated in establishing and where I once (1898-9) commanded United States troops—presumably preserving the peace at great expense. When this first attempt to run and govern a foreign power is to end depends, it is said, on a change in the election laws of Cuba, and on their administration to the satisfaction of all parties or factions. It seems to be now established as a precedent for United States intervention in Cuba, or for the establishment of a provisional government there, that all that is necessary is for any considerable number of the people of Cuba who are not pleased with the result of an election to fly to the bushes and organize and arm insurgent bands, then threaten the existing powers, and take life and destroy property.

We are indeed living in strange times. Past conditions and precedents are, as a result of the Spanish war, thrown to the winds in important governmental policies.

And we are not even governing Cuba in the sole interest of her people, but rather for foreigners. The Secretary of War in his recent annual report states, what is doubtless true, that-

A large part of the property in Cuba is owned by foreigners. * * *
The greater part of the wealth of Cuba is in its sugar plantations and in its sugar mills and machinery, most of which is owned by foreign capital.

This ownership is not largely by United States citizens.

This unfortunate situation grew partly out of the conditions existing prior to the late Spanish-American war, but it resulted principally from a policy promulgated during our military occupancy and when valuable tobacco and cane lands were generally very cheap and in the market. Citizens of the United States were then practically prohibited from purchasing such lands of the Cubans on the theory that our then occupancy of Cuba was so far parental, or in the character of a personal guardianship that dealing with the Cubans would be tainted with unfairness and partake of the nature of coercion, if not of fraud. But the capitalists from England, Canada, Germany, France, and even from Spain could freely buy and secure titles to these cheap and desirable lands. So as to franchises and concessions of every kind. No United States citizen dared apply; only absolute foreigners acquired such valuable rights. They secured great tracts of land and now hold them in perpetuity, and our now established military government of Cuba is engaged in preserving the peace and order so that these foreigners may enjoy the fruits of their bargains, and feel sure they can, from year to year, receive and spend in their palatial foreign homes, principally in European capitals, the net income from their Cuban investments.

Congress in its anxiety to enforce the sentiment of disinterestedness on our part unwittingly legislated so that the European nonresident speculators should own and safely enjoy Cuba's valuable lands and other property, including railroad and other franchises and concessions of the utmost value, by adding a section to the Army appropriation act of March 3, 1899, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That no property, franchises, or concessions of any kind whatever shall be granted by the United States, or by any military or other authority whatever, in the island of Cuba during the occupations thereof by the United States.

Our own people only were discriminated against by this act. This section is probably now operating and being enforced in the island of Cuba.

If no property rights or franchises or concessions had been granted to anybody residing outside of Cuba during our occupancy, it would doubtless have been the part of wisdom, and would at least have had the effect to reserve landed and other property, franchises, and concessions to a later time when through recuperation from poverty and otherwise, might have acquired at least in desirable small tracts, a fair share of the lands. Those desiring to become actual residents of Cuba would also have had a chance to become landowners there. Cuba is henceforth, certainly for long years to come, to be owned abroad in large part and probably under a landed system worse than has so long existed in Ireland, and our country is meantime, by treaty, bound at whatever cost of men and money to guarantee "Cuban independence, * * * to protect life, property, and individual liberty" throughout Cuba.

The few citizens of this country who, since the war, have secured some sort of holdings in the Isle of Pines or in Cuba need hardly be considered.

I was from the breaking out of the Spanish war in favor of annexing Cuba to the United States. Cuba lays in the throat of our channel of commerce over the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea, and especially to and with the South American republics and Central America; and its importance is to be augmented by the opening of the Panama Canal across the Isthmus. It is so near that a once Vice-President of the United States (John C. Breckinridge) in an intended flight from his country passed in an open rowboat from the coast of Florida across the Gulf Stream to Cuba.

While it is true, as we have seen, we seemingly and patriotically declared in favor of Cuban independence and against the purpose to go to war with Spain for conquest, or for the acquisition of territory, we did not keep such declaration, either in letter or spirit.

We refused to take the sovereignty of Cuba when offered us by the treaty commissioners of Spain during the negotiations at Paris (1898), as we are informed, yet we did not hesitate to take Porto Rico near by, and possibly the Isle of Pines and other smaller islands in the Antilles, and 3,141 islands, great and small, on the other side of the globe. With Cuba our sentiment of this kind became exhausted, and the United States have only become a wet nurse to her whenever she is in distress or some of her inhabitants cry aloud. I always favored, after the war was declared, the complete acquisition of Cuba, and with Cuba I would have been willing to let the Philippine Islands remain Spanish territory, or become independent, or pass into other hands more nearly related to their inhabitants in race, in habits, or in conditions.

We may yet acquire Cuba, but not without insurrectionary war and at the cost of life, limb, treasure, and blood.

President Roosevelt or his Administration is not responsible for past occurrences or present conditions in Cuba.

But now the Philippines are ours, and we have assumed grave responsibilities in relation to them and to the 10,000,000 of people inhabiting them, and to those of our country who have, as a consequence of our occupancy and ownership, become permanent residents thereof. The flag and the Constitution of the United States are in the Philippines and together, and new and important duties accompany them. These duties can not be evaded patriotically or honorably by neglect to safeguard our title and possession of these islands. National honor, interest, and duty alike call on us to so legislate as to protect these islands and their inhabitants, at least so long as we continue our sovereignty over them. [Applause.]

And should we at some time in the future conclude for any reason to voluntarily sell and cede them to another power, the cost of permanent fortifications can be included in the consideration to be received.

In the rise and fall of nations history teaches us many lessons, and there are yet others to be learned. It may be in the divine plan that our flag and constitutional principles are now on the other side of the earth, planted and established there to advance the cause of humanity, to upbuild civilization, and to spread Christianity to hitherto heathen races of mankind.

And above all let us not deceive ourselves and blindly hope that our unprotected condition will not be discovered or taken advantage of by another nation or by other nations; let us not foolishly assume that loud boasting of American prowess will answer the same purpose as real defenses on our now exposed distant possessions.

The fortifications bill now before us makes no provision for any defenses in Cuba or in Porto Rico, I believe. Of this I do not now complain.

For seacoast batteries the bill contains an appropriation of $600,000, to be expended in Hawaii and the Philippine Islands under no definite plan. Nothing is to be appropriated by the bill for necessary sites for fortifications or for the location of seacoast batteries in these islands. Much of the appropriations for the insular possessions will be largely thrown away without, and for want of, a definite plan or plans for defense at particular and important places. No plan is authorized by the bill, and the little indefinite appropriation proposed forbids the making of any plan.

The recommendations of the President, Secretary of War, and the Taft Board, composed of our most distinguished Army and Navy officers, are wholly disregarded so far as plans for defense are concerned. They unite in urgently recommending the early erection and completion of defensive fortifications at Manila Bay and Subic Bay, in the Philippines, and at Pearl Harbor and Honolulu, Hawaii. There is no designation in the bill even as to how and where in these insular possessions the small appropriation for seacoast batteries shall be expended, and this is only about one-third the War Department estimate for such batteries.

So as to the other appropriations for the insular possessions. This policy will not have the merit of economy to justify it; it will prove expensive, deceptive, and fatally useless.

If Manila, Pearl Harbor, and Honolulu can be safely held in case of war, no great American fleet would be needed at either place, and a foreign enemy would not risk leaving these places occupied in their rear. If they should be taken they would constitute bases and naval stations from which an enemy could sally against other parts of our country, Alaska especially.

But, above all, if we have ample defenses in these distant possessions we are almost certain not to have war with any oriental power. Our country would then take on the attitude of having prepared to maintain that peace which all should desire and devoutly pray for.

If we continue in our defenseless condition, we invite war, with all its dire and deplorable consequences, however glorious to our arms it might seem likely to terminate. Wars have had their missions to fulfill for humanity; they have, in times past, rid the world of tyrants, advanced civilization, and aided the spread of Christianity; they have freed races of people, but they may come to destroy human rights and human liberty, to overthrow civilization and Christianity. And should war come from a nation of people of other instincts and education who believe in other destinies than do the Anglo-Saxon people, then the true tide of human progress will be turned back and the mighty advance of modern civilization, of which we boast, and the beneficent influence of Christianity be stayed, dooming the people of the world to slavery again and political oppression such as existed in the Dark Ages.

The Taft Board has urgently recommended that the entrances to Manila Bay and Subic Bay should be promptly and securely fortified, both as necessary to the protection of Manila Harbor and the city of Manila. Subic Bay is located just outside of the barbor and commended that the city of Manila. the harbor and seems to be the key to its entrance, and if it should fall into an enemy's hands it would constitute a safe harbor for a fleet and, perhaps, a landing place for an army of occupation. This is the united judgment of Army and Navy With Manila Harbor securely fortified a naval base would be secured for our fleets, and an enemy would not be able to acquire an important one from which to operate. now, and shall continue to have, at Manila and in Luzon military and naval supplies of immense value to protect, the capture of which would entail a loss of millions to the United States.

If we are going to fortify these harbors ultimately, as the distinguished Member from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] seems to think, by piecemeal and in seven years, why not do it at once and avoid the impending danger of their capture?

It can be done at less cost and better as a unit undertaking. all experts in such work agree. Of the total $1,592,940 proposed by the bill to be appropriated for the defense of the insular possessions, $787,500 is for construction of fire-control stations, construction necessary for operation of submarine mines, etc., ammunition for seacoast guns, alterations, etc., of seacoast artillery, and inspection of instruments, range finders, etc., and only $805,000 for seacoast batteries and submarine mines, and their location is not provided for, and no sites for their locations are proposed to be appropriated for. Department's estimate for seacoast batteries for the insular possessions to be expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, is $2,303,000. There was appropriated for seacoast batteries, to be expended generally in the Hawaiian Islands, this fiscal year only $260,000; nothing for the Philippines, as it turned out.

It would seem that the proposed appropriations for guns and their operation, etc., were wholly out of proportion to the proposed appropriations for batteries and defenses where they can be used. Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, is not even in such condition now as to permit the entrance to it of our larger battle ships. The channel entrance should be widened and deepened. It is unnecessary here to further enlarge on the importance of fortifying Honolulu and Pearl Harbor. If they fall into an enemy's hands the Philippines will be lost, and Alaska and our Pacific States will be endangered.

There being no plan of fortifying the insular possessions provided in the bill, and the small appropriations proposed in the bill being so diffused for expenditures generally throughout all the insular possessions as not to admit of any connected plan being adopted, the conclusion unmistakably follows that if such appropriations are made and thus expended they will produce no desirable results and may prove absolutely value-

We are soon, it is said, to appropriate at least $50,000,000 for the improvement of rivers and harbors, much of which will be uselessly expended in unimportant places and where no common public benefit, if any, will result. Why should we not first protect our own boundaries and possessions.

CHESAPEAKE BAY SHOULD BE FORTIFIED.

Capes Henry and Charles lay on opposite sides of the channel entrance to the Chesapeake Bay. This bay in size and importance has no equal. Its connecting navigable streams, smaller bays, inlets, and deep shore waters augment its importance. With the entrance to this bay closed it constitutes the largest and safest harbor for ships and fleets to safely ride of any in the world.

Fortress Monroe, Norfolk, Newport News, the cities of Washington, Annapolis, and Baltimore, and other places on or adjacent to the Chesapeake Bay, and the entrances to the James and Potomac, Patuxent, Severn, and other rivers, also entrances to small bays, inlets, etc., will be rendered absolutely safe from attack by any foreign fleet, and the necessity of maintaining expensive defenses at any place within the bay or on tributary waters will become unnecessary. So all the other places on the bay where attacks might be made by ships of war and where troops could be landed will be securely protected; and all our railroad lines now across tributary parts of the bay (the Susquehanna, etc.) now wholly without defense (and they are so to remain) would also be made safe. So would also the canal connecting the Chesapeake and Delaware bays. Three States now liable to attack in case of war at many places where there are no sort of defenses would likewise be completely protected.

The cities mentioned may now be somewhat fortified, but they are not so securely protected as to warrant us in regarding them as absolutely safe in case of war with a nation having a fleet of first-class battle ships with modern guns and projectiles. If an enemy's fleet should enter the Chesapeake Bay convoying an army, as it could now do without molestation—there are no defenses at all at the mouth of the bay now-the army could be landed at some place along the shore of the bay without encountering any land defense and where it could form a base of operations against Washington, the capital, or against some other of our important cities. No such base or place of safety for a foreign navy could be found elsewhere on our eastern

Washington City was captured by the English in the war of 1812, and, though held but one day, the Capitol, the White House, the arsenal, the navy-yard, the Treasury building, the war office, the public library, the Long Bridge across the Potomac, etc., were burned, including archives, stores, etc., all valued at a million of dollars, by an army which was landed at Benedict, on the Patuxent, an arm of the Chesapeake. Alexandria, with many stores, was taken four days later.

Admiral Cochrane, commanding the English fleet, early in August, 1812, entered the Chesapeake Bay and there awaited leisurely the arrival from Bermuda of Rear-Admiral Malcolm with a flotilla. Meanwhile Rear-Admiral Cockburn ascended the Potomac, pretending to attack Fort Washington, 10 or 12 miles below this city. On Rear-Admiral Malcolm's arrival, Admiral Cochrane ascended the Patuxent, and the English land forces and marines (under General Ross and Admiral Cochrane) disembarked (commencing August 19) at Benedict, and from thence moved overland (a day's march only) to Bladensburg and Washington City, there being little real resistance, though President Madison in person, his Secretary of State, Monroe, and Generals Armstrong and Winder made heroic efforts to organize an opposing force. The city of Washington was taken (August 24, 1814) five days only after the first English troops commenced to land at Benedict. Then, as it would be now, the fortifications of the Potomac were not regarded of consequence in case a land force operated, in connection with a navy, to attack Washington City.

As showing how defenseless Washington was in 1812, though the Potomac was then fortified, I quote from Admiral Cochrane's report to his Government, of date of September 2, 1814:

To give their lordships a more correct idea of the place of attack, I send a sketch of the country, upon which the movements of the navy and army are portrayed. By it their lordships will observe that the best approach to Washington is by Port Tobacco, upon the Potomac, and Benedict, upon the Patuxent, from both of which are direct and good roads to that city, and their distances nearly allike. The roads from Benedict divide about 5 miles inland, the one by Piscataway and Bladensburg, the other following the course of the river, although at some distance from it, owing to the creeks that run up the country. This last passes through the towns of Nottingham and Marlborough to Bladensburg, at which town the river, called the Eastern Branch, that bounds Washington to the eastward, is fordable, and the distance is about 5 miles.

The foregoing shows how futile as a means of complete defense to Washington City it is to merely fortify the Potomac, leaving open the many other avenues of approach and attack. The other cities on or near the Chesapeake are not more favorably situated than is Washington in case of attack other than

The works at Fortress Monroe afford no obstruction to a fleet entering the bay. The channel for large vessels is 11½ miles from the nearest guns of that fort. It would not even furnish protection for a fleet of our own in the waters about it. As a defensive position it is now only of small practical importance.

It is said our warships could and would defend the entrance to the bay. If this were granted as true, it would be because they were withdrawn from other important operations where they should be employed. In case of war they will be needed on Generally stated, if the mouth of the bay is effectively closed | the Atlantic and Pacific coasts or in the Gulf of Mexico and to look after our now defenseless and far-off insular possessions. In our next war we will not be confined to the defense of Washington and Baltimore. Our Army and Navy will have to be employed in distant parts. I do not believe in purely defensive warfare. If we are to have war at all it should, to be successful, be aggressively waged. We should assail the enemy wherever he may be and not confine our forces to watching and guarding our own cities and shores or our coast lines. Hence the importance of adequate seacoast defenses. And how useless to devote our warships to the duty of blockading an entrance channel to a great bay in a time of war and thus paralyze them for real work. They should be in combined fleet on the high seas aggressively engaging and diverting the enemy instead of trying to do the work of land batteries.

The best armored ships of Russia were employed at Port Arthur in its defense, and a number of them were there lost. Thus Russia not only lost some of her best ships, but their being bottled up prevented a concentration of her fleets, while the Japanese ships, being on the outside, could and did sail away to a concentration at will, and thereby brought disaster to

The loss of a single first-class battle ship (Russia lost several at Port Arthur) would entail a loss of more than twice, or perhaps thrice, the cost of making the entrance to the Chesapeake Bay impregnable.

Great Britain has maintained for an hundred years or more an impregnable defense at Gibraltar, the entrance to the Mediterranean Sea, with no considerable exposed region and cities behind it to protect—certainly not of such importance as we have on and adjacent to the Chesapeake Bay.

This bay is now easy to fortify at its mouth, though, including shoal waters, the distance across it is about 10 miles. By constructing an artificial island in the entrance near the channel (as recommended by the Taft Board) and perhaps without such an island, with modern guns and projectiles, the channel can be closed beyond a possibility of a hostile ship or fleet being able to pass through it.

Coast defenses or land batteries are, and always have been, and always will be regarded as superior, with like or equivalent guns, to ships, however armed or armored, or to anything afloat; and submarine mines, torpedo boats, searchlights, and fire control for long-range guns can be used in practical work more effectively, all should agree, on land than on shipboard. Harbor floating defenses can also be provided if deemed necessary. A perfect plan for closing the Chesapeake against an enemy has been agreed on, as we shall soon see.

It is pretended that the fortifications to protect Washington, Baltimore, and Annapolis, and other places inside the Chesapeake would still have to be maintained as an inner line of defense. If this should be deemed necessary out of abundant caution, after the mouth of the Chesapeake was effectively closed, they could be kept up, ready to be manned, with comparatively little expense. But they need not be kept up, and they are not now in all respects and in all places perfect. They certainly are not all safe against modern guns and projectiles unless greatly strengthened. It would be foolish policy to expend the money necessary to do this—and besides, as we have seen, Washington and the other cities could be attacked and captured without forcing their sea or other fortifications.

It is said that the building of an island in the mouth of the bay may be only problematical, as possibly quicksand may underly the shoals. This is the suggestion of those who oppose closing the entrance to the bay at all. And it is not proposed to appropriate any money to hunt for the quicksand. Quicksand is as good an underbase for an island as anything else. It is solid and it is eternally durable, unless so situated as to be liable to attack by water or so exposed as to be shifting.

It is also said a foreign fleet would not dare enter the bay; that if it did it would become bottled up and ultimately lost, as was Cervera's at Santiago. This suggestion presupposes our own fleets are only employed in lying in wait for the enemy's This suggestion presupposes our Nothing is to be learned from Cervera's fatal errors. He sailed his fleet into a friendly harbor to aid a Spanish army and to help protect a friendly city. His fleet entered a comparatively small harbor for safety and for its defense and not a great bay with many harbors, or their equivalent, like the Chesapeake Bay affords, and where secure bases of operation could be found from which to carry on destructive war against important cities of an enemy's country and against the most important railroad and other lines of communication. Cervera's sailing into Santiago furnishes no example to warn a hostile fleet not to sail into the Chesapeake Bay. On the contrary, this bay, now open to friend and foe alike, would invite a fleet from across the Atlantic to find a safe abiding place therein and to seek safe havens from whence it could operate as circumstances might permit; and it would be possible for a formidable hostile fleet, when once within the bay, to itself close it against our ships of commerce or of war, and thus cut off Washington, Baltimore, Annapolis, Richmond, Newport News, and Norfolk, and other important places from the ocean.

The bill carries no appropriation whatever to fortify the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay. The War Department now estimates for this purpose $2,600,000, and $3,000,000 was once thought necessary, including $400,000 for the purchase of the required lands. Now, Virginia generously stands ready to donate and convey the lands. As long ago as March 4, 1890, the legislature of Virginia passed an act authorizing and empowering her governor to convey to the United States title to the lands at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay for the purpose of erecting fortifications for the defense of the entrance to the bay. Its present governor recently advised the War Department that he is ready to execute the deed of cession without cost to the United States, as authorized by the act.

But now let us see who it is that regards the early fortification of the mouth of Chesapeake Bay as of the first importance, and who it is that recommends the necessary appropriations to accomplish the work. 'This will more fully appear by appended extracts from reports of distinguished officers who have given much examination and consideration to the subject.

It is, of course, not possible for this Government to do all the things which might be done in its interest or for its safety, but we should do the things of the first importance, among which duty demands that we fortify our insular possessions; also the entrance to the Chesapeake Bay, and thereby in time of peace prepare to maintain it.

The glories of peace outshine those of war, and it is infinitely cheaper to woo peace than to wage war.

I believe in my country and her destiny. I rejoice in her civil history, pregnant as it is with great things accomplished in securing the individual rights of man. I glory in her achievements in war through which (1776–1783) she attained independence; by which (1812–1815) she later secured her rights on the high seas, and in which (1846–1848) still later she acquired vast territories to add to her domain, and again as a result of which (1861–1865) slavery under her flag became forever impossible, and still again in consequence of which (1898) the principle was upheld that one nation has a right to go to war for humanity's sake alone, and at the end of which she enlarged her possessions and has become recognized among all nations as a first power in strength and influence.

She should now, in her greatness, stand for all that is good as well as great, and for peace; and in doing this she should be just and generous to all other nations and peoples. She can not hold her paramount position among nations and preserve an enduring peace unless she safeguards it by putting her possessions in such state of defense as to insure their safety. A war footing is a peace footing.

I have never been an alarmist, nor do I profess the gift of prophecy; but judging the present conditions of the world by the most obvious and natural rules of reasoning, I feel that unless wisdom prevails in our councils and in the conduct and administration of our affairs, the time is at hand when we are in supreme danger of being humbled as a nation and people, and when constitutional liberty may be endangered. I may not live to see this direful day, though others in the sound of my voice will if we fail to do our duty here.

Mr. Chairman, I probably have not the time allotted me left to go into the matter of reviewing the recommendations of the President of the United States, oft repeated, and of the Secretary of War, and of the boards that have been appointed by the President and the Secretary of War. Some criticisms were made at the time that the Taft Board was not authorized by Congress and that the Endicott Board was. The critics seemed to think that it required a law of Congress to legislate brains into the members of the Board, or integrity, and they pretend not to believe anything found in the report of the distinguished military and naval officers who were appointed by President Roosevelt, called the "Taft Board." But, Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee, I will put in my remarks the references or extracts from the report of the Endicott Board, showing that it did not fail to recognize the importance of fortifying the mouth of Chesapeake Bay, but that it only failed to recommend a complete plan for so doing because the art of war had not then progressed far enough to enable it to make a definite plan to fortify it, but that Board agreed, and so reported, that its fortification was of the first importance, and it was so indicated in paragraph 3, page 9, of its report of date of January 23, 1886. For more than twenty years the importance of the matter has been urged.

The Board appointed by President Roosevelt, called the "Taft Board," was made up of some of the most distinguished army and naval officers we have or ever had. That Board was unani mous in recommending that the place of first importance, and the first that ought to be fortified in the United States of all the important places it mentioned—the first in significance and the first in interest to the United States—and as a matter of economy, was the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay. It recommended that effective action should be promptly taken so as to at an early day protect all of the places within the bay to which I have undertaken to refer.

Of the various places that they regarded as of some importance they put Chesapeake Bay in the order of first importance. The order of the President of the United States constituting the Board was made January 31, 1905, and among other things that he required the Board to consider was the order of importance in fortifying places for the protection of the country, and first at the head of the Board's list is the fortification proposed to be constructed between Cape Henry and Cape Charles at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay.

I do not think that anything can be added. Any person acquainting himself with the geography will understand its supreme and grave importance. My complaint is that we do not or have not entered on the work of fortifying this place long ago, as its great importance demands and as all those who have investigated the matter have concluded.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I have any time I will surrender it, provided I am given permission to put in my closing remarks some extracts and proper connecting remarks of the different reports of the Secretary of War.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Certainly. Mr. KEIFER.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the gentleman give us an idea of about how much of an appropriation would be required to carry out the recommendations of the Taft Board with reference to the for-tification of the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay?

Mr. KEIFER. I have already stated that the estimates for this purpose to be expended for the fiscal year ending June 30, which estimate I understand was to complete it, was 1908. $2,600,000.

Mr. NORRIS. That would complete it?
Mr. KEIFER. That is my understanding, and leaving out the fact which was supposed to exist at one time, when the estimate was made, of four or five hundred thousand dollars to be used in the purchase of a site.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him with a suggestion?
Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will yield sufficient time to clear this I know the gentleman from Ohio does not wish to make any misleading statement on the subject.

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly not.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I understand, and the gentleman will correct me if I am wrong, that the estimate itself for the island would cost $2,600,000, and that the estimate for the fortification, etc., is $6,000,000. The $2,600,000 is for the island alone, and is not for any guns or batteries.

I call the gentleman's attention to the original Taft report, where he will find the Chesapeake Bay estimates to be $6,102,871, which includes the armament.

Mr. KEIFER. That does not refer to the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay alone?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes; so I understand it.

Mr. NORRIS. Does that include the armament not only on the islands, but on the two capes?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. So I understand it. The only question is what the estimate covers, whether simply the island or the armament.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; that is right. My impression is that the recommendation included the building of an island, but it was supposed to be sufficient to complete an effective construction or fortification at the island. I will look further into that matter, if I may be permitted.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I may state in that connection that, as a matter of fact, the estimate was an engineer's estimate that came before the committee. The engineers construct the emplacements and reclaim the land, and of course could make and would make no estimates for armament, that being made by the Chief of Ordnance and other officers of the War Depart-

Mr. KEIFER. But I understand there was a combined es timate made up by the several persons or officers connected with the board, and the estimate was made to cover everything.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman will discover, I think, that it was over $6,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. In presenting the views of officers and boards who favor fortifying Chesapeake Bay, etc., I call attention again to what is quoted already in the body of my speech from President Roosevelt's last annual message. In his message transmitting (March 5, 1906) and commending the report of the Taft Board to Congress he says:

New localities are pressing their claims for defense. The insular possessions can not be held unless the principal ports, naval bases, and coal stations are fortified before the outbreak of war.

In the same message he says:

It is to be noted that the entrance to Chesapeake Bay, not before recommended or authorized by Congress, is added to the list of ports in the United States to be defended, with important reasons therefor already stated.

Also in the same message he says:

Also in the same message he says:

The necessity for a complete and adequate system of coast defense is greater to-day than twenty years ago, for the increased wealth of the country offers more tempting inducements to attack, and a hostile fleet can reach our coast in a much shorter period of time. The fact that we now have a navy does not in any wise diminish the importance of coast defenses; on the contrary, that fact emphasizes their value and the necessity for their construction. It is an accepted naval maxim that a navy can be used to strategic advantage only when acting on the offensive, and it can be free to so operate only after our coast defense is reasonably secure and so recognized by the country. It was due to the securely defended condition of the Japanese ports that the Japanese fleet was free to seek out and watch its proper objective—the Russian fleet—without fear of interruption or recall to guard its home ports against raids by the Vladivostok squadron. This, one of the most valuable lessons of the late war in the East, is worthy of serious consideration by our country, with its extensive coast line, its many important harbors, and its many wealthy manufacturing coast cities.

The Secretary of War (Mr. Taft) was President of the Taft

The Secretary of War (Mr. Taft) was President of the Taft Board and concurred in its recommendations. In his recent annual report he says:

The more important recommendations of the board concerning particular places are those which relate to the defense of the entrance to Chesapeake Bay, the entrance to Long Island Sound, and Puget Sound. The Endicott Board did not recommend Puget Sound for defense, and while attaching importance to defenses at the entrance to Chesapeake Bay for the protection of Hampton Roads, Norfolk, Newport News, Washington, and Baltimore, and at the eastern entrance to Long Island Sound for the approaches to New York, confined its recommendations to so-called "floating defenses" for outer lines, designed especially for operating in harbors or close to land, and armored more heavily and armed with heavier guns than any probable adversary. In the development of coast-defense operations these "floating defenses" were found to be unnecessary and have never been built. The adequate defense of these positions has therefore received the consideration of the board.

Commercially and strategically Chesapeake Bay is to-day, as it always has been, of the very first importance. With the entrance as it is now, unfortified, a hostile fleet, in the opinion of the present board, "should it gain control of the sea, can establish, without coming under the fire of a single gun, a base on its shores, pass in and out at pleasure, have access to large quantities of valuable supplies of all kinds, and paralyze the great trunk rallway lines crossing the head of the bay." For this reason the board has considered the defense of the entrance to Chesapeake Bay to require immediate attention.

From his recent testimony before a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, among other things, I quote:

The Endicott Board, as you may recollect, was appointed by President Cleveland in the incumbency of Mr. Endicott as Secretary of War, and that board reported a comprehensive system of coast defenses. That was away back in 1886 or 1887, was it not?

General Crozier. 1886. It was appointed in 1885.

Secretary Taft. It was, of course, a system based on the then known methods of defense, and included a good deal that would now be obsolete if it had been adopted and carried out entirely. One of the great features of it was a floating defense system, which has not been adopted and is not approved now according to modern ideas, and it seems as if the plan had become so old that there ought to be a new investigation into the matter. Accordingly a board was appointed, with the Secretary of War as the nominal head and a lot of very technical gentlemen who understood the business as the real committee, and they made a report supplementary to that of the Endicott Board.

Just why the Endicott Board did not make a provision for Chesapeake Bay perhaps I can not state definitely, except to say that they probably had in mind these floating defenses, which were to be located near the mouth of the bay. Chesapeake Bay, from a strategic standpoint, is the most vulnerable place in the United States, because it is possible now for an enemy to enter that bay and find a great many places where a landing could be effected without difficulty, free from the risk of storm, and without coming under the fire of any guns; and a great many places on the bay where we should be very much injured by attack, because you know there are a great many trunk lines that cross the bay-at various points, or cross various estuaries of the bay, which ought to be protected against that kind of attack.

estuaries of the bay, which ought to be protected against that kind of attack.

The difficulty of fortifying the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay is that it is so wide; and the only fortifications that have been determined upon by the Board are those which involve the construction of an artificial island on what is called the "Middle Ground." In the appropriations that we ask to-day there is an item of $3,000,000, $400,000 of which is for the purchase of land on the Cape Henry side, and $2,600,000 for the construction of an island sufficiently large to make such fortification as will render that impregnable.

Now it has been frequently stated, and it is true, that as to any of the great harbors which are fortified under the Endicott Board, in those harbors it would probably be impossible for a foreign fleet to enter; but there are places where there are no fortifications, and Chesapeake Bay, except at Fortress Monroe, Baltimore, and Washington, has no fortifications, and a hostile fleet can enter without difficulty. difficulty.

After the island in the Chesapeake, I give you what is the most important things we have, and those are the insular possessions: For the construction of seacoast batteries, Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, $250,000; Honolulu, and Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, $350,000; Manila, P. I., $1,359,000, and Subic Bay, P. I., $344,000, making a total of $2,303,000.

Col. F. V. Abbot, assistant to Chief of Engineers, in his testimony before the subcommittee, said:

Mr. SMITH. There seems to be a good deal of talk about the defenses at Cape Henry as being part of the defenses of Chesapeake Bay. The outer defenses are referred to, substantially, as the same defenses, are they not?

Colonel Arbor. A fort on a natural island near Cape Charles, another Cape Harbor.

Colonel Abbot. A fort on a natural island near Cape Charles, another on Cape Henry, and a heavy armament on this island constitute the only proposed defenses for the entrance to Chesapeake Bay. Neither fort alone would hold the entrance without the others.

Mr. Smith. Is it not usual to refer to Cape Henry as an entire description of that locality?
Colonel Abbot. No. sir; I should say not.

Mr. Smith. The line of defense is to be on the line between Cape Henry and Cape Charles, passing through the proposed island?
Colonel Abbot. Yes.

Mr. Smith. Are all of these substantially new projects?
Colonel Abbot. Yes. No defense of the entrance of Chesapeake Bay was called for by the Endicott Board scheme, as that Board believed the entrance too wide to be held by guns on shore and did not believe the cost of constructing an artificial island was justified at that time. They thought floating defenses were needed at the entrance.

The defeat of a plan reported to this House, based upon a scheme of a certain board in the Navy Department, which came up in the Forty-eighth Congress led to the act of March 3, 1885, which authorized President Cleveland to appoint the Endicott Board. That plan looked only to the appropriation Endicott Board. That plan looked only to the appropriation of money to patch up our old ships. On February 20, 1885, I made a somewhat lengthy speech against it, and the result of the full consideration of the then pending bill was its defeat, and then Congress looked about for some plan to defend our coasts. The Endicott Board reported January 23, 1886, twenty-one years ago. It acted upon the best lights before it, and although it the poly of its report (page 3, p. 9). though it recommended in the body of its report (par. 3, p. 9) the importance of fortifying Chesapeake Bay at its mouth, it did not feel that it could make a satisfactory plan for the complete defense of the mouth of the bay. Since its report great progress has been made in the artillery and in matters of coast defense, such as has arisen by the introduction of new guns and long-range projectiles, searchlights, harbor-floating defenses, etc.

The Taft or National Coast Defense Board was appointed by President Roosevelt and convened on January 31, 1905. The Board made its report on February 1, 1906. In the order convening the Board the President used this language:

vening the Board the President used this language:

The report of the Endicott Board, submitted nineteen years ago, was very carefully considered by its distinguished members. It enunciated sound military principles and recommended the best application of these principles with the conditions then existing. It fully deserved the generous support it has received from Congress.

Nearly two-thirds of the land armament recommended by the Board has been installed or provided for, but since the date of the report so many conditions then existing have been materially modified, and the engines or implements of war have been so greatly improved, and others, untried or unknown, of undoubted value developed, giving a greater advantage to the defense, that it is confidently believed our harbor defense can be completed effectively and satisfactorily with a much less expenditure of money than has been heretofore estimated. With this object in view the Board will recommend the armament fixed and floating, mobile torpedoes, submarine mines, and all other defense with the most economical and advantageous expenditure of money.

The Board will also recommend the order in which the proposed defense shall be completed, so that all the elements of harbor defense may be properly and effectively coordinated.

The detail of the Board consisted of the following distin-

The detail of the Board consisted of the following distinguished officers of the Army and Navy, Secretary Taft being president of the Board:

Hon. William H. Taft, Secretary of War, president of the Board.
Lieut. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, Chief of Staff.
Maj. Gen. George L. Gillespie, Assistant Chief of Staff.
Brig. Gen. Adolphus W. Greely, Chief Signal Officer.
Brig. Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance.

Maj. George W. Goethals, General Staff, secretary of the Board.

Later there was added to the Board the following-named officers of the Army:

Maj. Gen. John C. Bates, Assistant Chief of Staff, detailed by General Orders, No. 99, June 28, 1905, vice Maj. Gen. G. L. Gillespie, retired, Chief of Staff, January 15, 1906.

Brig. Gen. Samuel M. Mills, Chief of Artillery, detailed by General Orders, No. 106, June 30, 1905.

The following are quotations from the report of the Taft Board:

The Endicott Board's report was submitted in 1886. The principles of coast defense, so clearly stated therein, and the necessity of having our important and strategic and commercial centers made secure against naval attack, with as little delay as possible, are equally applicable to-day and need not be repeated. The wealth of the country, which has materially increased, offers even more tempting inducements to attack than was the case twenty years ago, while an increase of speed enables a hostile fleet to appear off our coast in a very much less period of time. It is more essential than ever that we should be prepared along the line of our 4,000 miles of coast to ward off any hostile blow that may be attempted.

blow that may be attempted.

The Endicott Board, while attaching importance to defenses at the entrance to Chesapeake Bay, for the protection of Hampton Roads, Norfolk, Newport News, Washington, and Baltimore, and at the eastern entrance to Long Island Sound for the approaches to New York, confined its recommendations to so-called "floating defenses" for outer lines. Floating defenses are defined to be "floating defenses" for outer lines. Floating defenses are defined to be "floating batteries designed specially for operating in harbors or close to the land—armored more heavily and armed with heavier guns than any probable adversary. Guns provided with an efficient range-finding system can now bring an effective fire on all parts of these wide channels and render unnecessary the "floating defenses," which have never been built and which, if they had been, would be objectionable because of vulnerability and of the great cost of construction and maintenance.

Commercially and strategically Chesapeake Bay is to-day, as it always has been, of the very first importance. With the entrance as it is now, unfortified, a hostile fleet, should it gain control of the sea, can establish, without coming under the fire of a single gun, a base on its shores, pass in and out at pleasure, have access to large quantities of valuable supplies of all kinds, and paralyze the great trunk railway lines crossing the head of the bay.

The completion of the fortifications at the entrance to Long Island Sound is placed second to Chesapeake Bay only because there are some guns already mounted at the former, while there are none to defend the channel between Cape Charles and Cape Henry.

Since 1886 our territorial limits have been enlarged by the addition of the insular possessions. They are distant from the great centers and sources of supply and can not be held unless their principal ports are fortified before the outbreak of war. It is clear that the defense should be provided with as little delay as possible. Naval bases and coaling sta

The order of the President of January 31, 1905, required the board to recommend which of the proposed defenses should be completed first. I quote again from the report of the board:

It is required that the board shall give expression to the order in which the proposed defense shall be completed so that all the elements of harbor defense may be properly and effectively coordinated.

Among the places recommended to be defended, the following, in the order named, are considered of special importance: Entrance to Chesspeake Bay, eastern entrance to Long Island Sound, Puget Sound, Subic Bay, Gnantanamo, and entrance to Manila Bay. Naval bases are included in all the places named.

It will thus be seen that the Chesapeake Bay is unanimously recommended to be defended first of all our coast defenses. The committee of the Taft Board, reporting February 1, 1906, to the Secretary of War, uses this language:

The importance of securing the entrance of the Chesapeake Bay at Cape Henry as an outer line of defense to Baltimore, Washington, Newport News, Norfolk, and the great railroads crossing the Susquehanna River at the head of the bay can not be exaggerated and was recognized in the report of the Endicott Board (par. 3, p. 9). Any expenditure, however great, is justifiable for the protection of such vast interests.

I offer in support of the views I have submitted some extracts from a letter of the Board of Trade and Business Men's Association of Norfolk to the Secretary of War, dated April 26;

In the absence of fortifications at that point the defense of the Norfolk Navy-Yard and the Newport News shipyard would be left entirely to our harbor-defense vessels and Fort Monroe. If the former should be overpowered by a superior naval force, the enemy's ships could anchor in Chesapeake Bay, within 10½ miles from the navy-yard at Norfolk and 9½ miles from the Newport News shipyard, at a point where the guns of Fort Monroe would not be effective against heavily armored ships. At these distances recent developments in the Russo-Japanese war have shown that great damage can be done to unfortified shipyards or communities.

They could also pass up the bay in the direction of Annapolis, Baltimore, and Washington outside of effective range of the heavy guns at Fort Monroe; in fact, the nearest point of approach to the fortifications at Old Point for ships of heavy draft bound for the above-named ports is 11½ nautical miles.

I also quote from resolutions of the directors of the Baltimore

I also quote from resolutions of the directors of the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce passed March 12, 1906:

Resolved, That the board of directors of the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce urges upon the Members of this State in Congress the necessity of giving the plan which contemplates the erection of a defensive fortification at Cape Henry careful and earnest thought and consideration, such a work being deemed desirable both from a defensive as well as an economical point of view.

I quote from the Norfolk Landmark of date of March 4, 1906: Now, what strikes the Landmark particularly in this is the reference to the admitted inadequacy of the present land defenses of the Chesapeake Bay cities, in which Norfolk, Portsmouth, and Newport News, as well as Annapolis, Washington, and Baltimore, may be included.

It is safe to say that no other country of any importance and enlightenment would have left unfortified, as this country has done, so vital a point as Cape Henry. Great Britain would long ago have made it a Gibraitar. It is a far more important strategic point to the United States than Gibraitar is to England. It concerns the immediate safety of our own territory.

The channel for large vessels passing between the Virginia capes is only about 4 miles from Cape Henry. Formidable war ships, therefore, would be compelled, on attempting to enter, to come within close range of the modern big guns, which carry twice that far with ease.

Many years ago the Endicott Commission recommended to the Government the heavy fortification of this important point. A bill is now before Congress providing for the adoption of the advice then given, with suitable modern improvements. There would be no exceuse for failure to adopt this bill, which has the hearty approval of the Secretary of War and all the military experts of the country.

In the war of 1812 the national capital was burned by British ships which passed without difficulty through the Virginia capes. In those days ordnance did not carry so far as it does now, nor was it nearly so effective. It would be unworthy of a great nation to be caught to-day with its most important body of water unguarded, when the one entrance could easily be made impassable in time of war by the expenditure of a reasonable sum of money in time of peace.

I quote further, from an editorial in the Virginian-Pilot, Nor-

I quote further, from an editorial in the Virginian-Pilot, Norfolk, Va., dated March 11, 1906:

The necessity of constructing fortifications at Cape Henry was pointed out by the Endicott Commission several years ago. That necessity has been increasing in urgency ever since, and the time is now at hand when the adequate protection of the entrance to the bay can not be longer delayed without inviting serious consequences to the country. This is strongly and forcibly pointed out in the report of the Taft Board, of expert Army and Navy officers, which was recently transmitted to Congress by President Roosevelt. The portion of the report referring to the entrance to Chesapeake Bay says, among other things: "A hostile fleet, should it gain control of the sea, could establish without the fire of a single gun a base on its shores, pass in and out at pleasure, have access to large quantities of valuable supplies, and paralyze the great trunk railway lines crossing the head of the bay. Further, the national capital, the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and the city of Baltimore would be unprotected, except for such defense as would be furnished by harbor defense vessels. Newport News and Norfolk, with their important shipyards, would be in a similar position, for it has been demonstrated that Fortress Monroe is inadequate for the defense of Hampton Roads.

Under these conditions the erection of powerful fortifications at Cape Henry should receive the earliest practicable attention at the hands of Congress. The proper defense of the Chesapeake Bay is of the utmost importance, both from a strategic and a commercial standpoint. This defense can be furnished only by the fortification of Cape Henry

The following is taken from the Washington Post, and it bears on the question of the necessity of fortifying our important defenses to relieve and release from coast or shore duty our battle ships and cruisers:

Read correctly between the lines, this means that the British Admiralty proposes by the use of forty submarines not only to greatly strengthen their home harbor defenses, but to relieve and release from shore duty many battle ships and cruisers for active service on the high seas wherever they may be needed.

I also present with approval an extract from a recent address of now Attorney-General of the United States, Hon. Charles J. Bonaparte—great nephew of the great Napoleon—late Secretary of the Navy, in which he expresses his views as to our country and its exposed condition and liability to foreign attack, and as to the necessity for "a respectable defensive posture," and appeals for the support "of the Commander in Chief of our land and naval forces of sea and land, under the Constitution, in assuring our country's peace by maintaining her strength for war," and in which he concludes by an appeal in behalf of Congress for liberal "provision for the national defense," such as will confirm the title of "peacemaker on our first public servant," and give our country "such strength as may gain and guard for her the peace of righteousness:'

and give our country "such strength as may gain and guard for her the peace of righteousness:"

New York could be reached to-day by a powerful hostile army in one-fourth and San Francisco in one-half the time needed by any possible enemy under the most favorable circumstances to reach the most exposed great capital of Europe.

Our detached and distant situation has ceased to be. The oceans which bathe our shores to the east and the west are no longer safe-guards against serious invasion. Our ports are filled up with huge steamers, practically all under foreign flags, which await but a word on the electric wire to become transports to their utmost capacity with trained soldiers or loaded down with munitions of war.

Nor is this all. A hundred years ago weeks, even months, were needed to concentrate and embark any formidable force at any seaport of any nation with which we could then or now be at war. To-day this a matter of hours. The mere orders then took days, often weeks, in transmission. Now they hardly take seconds.

While we have thus drawn prodigiously nearer to possible and certainly dangerous enemies, we have also grown prodigiously bigger and richer and more obtrusive, and therefore vastly more likely to awaken envy, distrust, and fear, or, in other words, to have enemies.

It is not merely that Americans are twentyfold as many and a hundredfold, nay, far more than a hundredfold, as rich as they were when Washington rought rest at Mount Vernon, that their empire stretches from sea to sen on this continent and has spread to the Antilles and the Isthmus, the jungles of Asia's islands, and the snows of Alaska.

Bestdes and beyond all this material change there has come a moral change, a change unsought by ourselves and unwelcome to many, perhaps to the most of us, whereby we feel and speak and are tempted to, act no longer as man separated by months of ocean from news of their nearest kindred and by an impenetrable wilderness from even the waters of the Pacific, but as citizens of a nation great among the

Every morning brings to the breakfast table of each one of us a day's history of our fellow-men of every race and in every clime. We can not wholly shut our eyes to aught that goes amiss for humanity throughout the world; we can not wholly close our ears to any tale of wrongdoing, however distant or allen may be the sufferers, and despite ourselves the thought, half formed and half conscious, yet daily growing clearer to us and to others, forces itself upon our minds that in the vast and terrible drama of human destiny a nation such as ours has grown to be must have its allotted, its enforced, part to play.

An American may be as good a patriot as our land can show and yet sigh for our early days of safety through obscurity and isolation; but if, like the ostrich, he refuses to own what his eyes would show him—if he refuses to open them to facts, namely, that for us the days of obscurity and isolation are gone forever and safety must now be sought elsewhere—he abdicates his reason and imperils his country.

"In time of peace prepare for war," was a maxim in which Washington repeatedly and emphatically asserted his belief; and as no public man ever wished or tried more consistently or more earnestly to preserve to his country the incalculable blessings of peace, so none was ever more invariably solicitous to maintain, so far as the poverty of our early days and the support of our National Legislature might permit, the suitable establishments necessary to keep us "on a respectable defensive posture."

I bespeak, then, of all thoughtful and patriotic citizens their aid to my successor in the great Department of our Federal Government but lately in my keeping, and to his colleagues in the administration of the sister service, and, most of all, to the Commander in Chief of our forces of land and sea, under the Constitution, in assuring our country's peace by maintaining her strength for war.

I ask for the Congress a hearty support from public opinion in a liberal provision for the national defense, and, moreover, a loud and clear assurance of such support to drown the clamor of self-interest, of delusion, of prejudice, of parsimony in dealing with this

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take a few moments to refer to one matter discussed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer]. I do not care to have his statements regarding the proposed defenses of the entrance to Chesapeake Bay go into the RECORD unchallenged. I desire that the committee have before it the information which was before the Committee on Appropriations when it determined to eliminate or rather not to make appropriations for these proposed defenses. In 1886 a board, known as the "Endicott Board," appointed under the authority of Congress, prepared a comprehensive plan for the defense of the coasts of this country. They prepared plans which included the defense of Chesapeake Bay and of the important cities access to which is had from the Chesapeake Bay. All of the important places within the bay are amply fortified to-day. That statement is based upon information furnished by the Secretary of War and by men with the technical knowledge necessary to pass upon such questions. Last year a board was appointed by the President of the United States which is known as the "Taft Board," and that Board made a report and recommended that there be erected at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay an artificial island in order to make perfect the defense of the places within the bay. The Secretary of War asked an appropriation of $3,000,000 in order to erect or build this island. The estimate of the cost of the island was based upon no information from which an accurate estimate could be made, but was as nearly as could be a chance guess. The committee did not feel that it would be justified in authorizing the initiation of this project without some definite information as to its cost. More than that, there have been expended during the past eighteen years over $64,000,000 in fortifying the coast of this country in accordance with the plan of the Endicott Board. It will take some thirty-odd millions of dollars to complete the defenses outlined by that Board. The committee was of the belief that it would be wise to complete as far as now required the defenses originally planned by the Endicott Board before undertaking to initiate these new and additional defenses.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.
Mr. PRINCE. There were some hearings before the Military Committee of date January 11, 1907, in which it was stated by Captain Hagood that the actual amount which has been laid out in fortifications, gun batteries, seachlights, power plants, etc., is $76,000,000 instead of $64,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true. In speaking of the amount expended in the carrying out of the Endicott Board's plan, a number of items mentioned by the gentleman are not included. As a matter of fact, since that report of the Endicott Board Congress has appropriated over $120,000,000.

Mr. PRINCE. Let me suggest to the gentleman further that since the Endicott Board there has been expended over $126,000,000, which is the aggregate contained in the fortifica-

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is so; but it includes a number of items of expenditure which were not included within the plans of the Endicott Board. For instance, we built a gun foundry; we have maintained and erected arsenals; we have done a great many other things which were not within the contemplation of the plans of the Endicott Board. As I was about to show, the imperativeness of this proposed defense was never made apparent, never suggested, until this session of Congress. As far as I have been able to ascertain, the desirability of this particular defense is, and was first, apparent at joint maneuvers of the Army and Navy a year and a half or two years ago. It appeared to the Committee on Appropriations that the Endicott Board believed it desirable to have certain additional defenses in the mouth of the Chesapeake, and that board recommended the creation of so-called "floating defenses," which were to be in the nature of heavily armored and heavily armed harbor-defense boats, also eighteen torpedo boats, which were recommended for use there, and some other apparatus for the defense of the place. It was stated to the committee that no other method of defense was suggested, because the expense of any other method would have been prohibitive. The estimate that $3,000,000 would build this island is purely speculative.

The plan proposed at present contemplates erecting an island of about 50 acres on a shoal which is now covered by from 15 There has never been a boring, there has to 20 feet of water. never been an examination, there has never been any information obtained upon which the engineers can base an accurate estimate of what it will cost to build such an island. It might be built for $3,000,000 or it may require the expenditure of $25,000,000. The Secretary of War stated to the committee that the Navy was more insistent upon this particular defense being erected than the Army officials. He stated that Norfolk, Richmond, Fort Monroe, and Newport News, the chief places within the waters, are all amply fortified. This island is probably a desirable acquisition to the existing defenses if it could be erected at a cost that was not prohibitive; but the committee believes that with only about two-thirds, speaking roughly, of the plans of the Endicott Board carried out, with these plans having been in existence for twenty years before a suggestion is made that this island is imperatively necessary for the defense of the waters of the Chesapeake, with so much still remaining to be done in order to complete the system of defense laid down by the Endicott Board not repudiated by the Taft Board, that it was not desirable at this time to stop the completion of the work outlined by the Endicott Board and indorsed by the Taft Board in order to initiate this new project. The President, in his message transmitting the report of the Taft Board to Congress, called attention to the fact that up until about the civil war this country had a system of coast defenses that made our principal ports and the seacoasts impregnable; that by the introduction and invention of rifled cannon about that time these defenses became obsolete, yet no attempt was made by Congress for twenty years even to obtain a plan to fortify in proper manner the coasts. A plan was then adopted. Congress has been appropriating for twenty years since then to obtain a perfect system of coast defenses, so far as they can be perfect. The members of the committee believed that it would be the part of wisdom to complete the defenses that all parties have agreed are imperative, particularly since it is admitted that the places within which this outer line of defense would be erected are amply fortified. I wished simply to have these facts go in the RECORD with the statement of the gentleman from Ohio, so that when the members of the committee take the matter up and investigate its merits they might have the reasons which actuated the committee in refusing at this time to initiate this project.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I see on page 3, beginning with "armament of fortification" and running over to line 13, page 5, appropriations for certain purposes amounting to nearly $2,000,000. Under the title of "Armament of fortification," on reading that I find it is entirely possible to utilize these appropriations, without procuring any armament at all, in the erection of factories and the purchase of material by the Government to manufacture all of these things instead of buying them from regularly operating manufacturers of arms and ammunition in the United States. I would like to ask if it is the part of the seacoast defense of the United States to go into the manufacturing business and manufacture guns and ammunitions by the United States itself and provide for this in the fortification bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, that has been the practice since the gentleman has been a Member of the House. Some of these guns are manufactured at arsenals, and some, I understand, are obtained by contract are obtained by contract.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. We now have a factory under the control of the Navy Department to manufacture guns there. Is it the purpose to duplicate the various manufacturing industries under direct control of the United States under the War Department also and enter upon the construction of these guns?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; it is not the purpose to initiate anything new in this regard.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I want to inquire whether the language of this bill does not authorize precisely that, the purchase of machinery for the manufacture of these guns and various forms of ammunition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It provides for the purchase, manufacture, and test of machine and automatic guns, not machines.

The machine is an adjective referring to guns.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. "And the machinery necessary to their manufacture at the arsenals," which follows in almost every section.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true. That language has been carried in this bill ever since the gentleman from Connecticut has been a Member of the House, and it has been employed in part for this purpose.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Is it the purpose in this bill to increase the facilities of the United States for the manufacture of these articles?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. The object is to enable the head of the Bureau of Ordnance to replace some machinery of a not very extensive character which is required at the arsenals where these guns are manufactured. Part of these guns are purchased, part of them are manufactured by the Government, and I understand the policy of the Department to be so to distribute the work as to keep both the private establishments and the Government establishments in as nearly a complete condition of operation as possible. There is no contemplated departure from the policy which has always existed.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. My reason for making the inquiry, I will state, Mr. Chairman, is that I think the policy of most of the governments, of Europe at least, is to encourage the development of private manufactories in such a way as to have their use in times of war, and not to be solely dependent upon the facilities of the government itself. And it seems to me, not only in this case, but in many other cases, in the appropriation bills that come before us, the tendency is to a concentration of all this work, even to making the clothes of the soldiers, making the guns for the Navy, and the whole business in the hands of the various Departments of the Government, with the result that if it is continued it certainly can not be very long before the Government will be dependent solely upon itself and will have no alternate reliance upon any private manufacturer after a while.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The policy of this Government has been, I imagine, the same as the policy of other governments. From some investigation. I have made I find it has been necessary for Congress to some extent to develop the resources of the Government to supply munitions of war. I believe we have relied a little too much in this country upon the private manufacturers, and we have paid the price for so doing. I am one of those who believe that the Government itself should have the resources and facilities for furnishing war materials without depending entirely upon private manufacturers. I believe with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] that to a reasonable degree the Government should encourage private enterprise; but last year Congress was compelled to protect the Government and to authorize the commencement of a powder factory, because the members were convinced that a so-called powder trust was taking advantage of the inability of the Government to supply its own needs in its own factories. Whenever the manufacturer of these guns is in the same condition I shall favor the Government enlarging as rapidly as possible its own facilities, in order to protect itself from the rapaciousness of the private contractors.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. And yet the gentleman understands, of course, that the pursuance of the opposite policy is what has built up the great works of the Krupps in Germany and the Maxim-Vickers works in England, and those Governments place large reliance upon the efforts of manufacturing institutions outside of their navy-yards and arsenals.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In this country the Government is entirely dependent upon the armor-plate concerns, and the proof has been quite conclusive, to my mind, that very frequently this Government has been coerced into paying twice as much as armor was worth.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. During the Spanish war they "held up" the Government of the United States in the matter of armor plate for our naked men-of-war. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] yields the floor I wish he would tell us something about the powder mo-nopoly or powder trust. I happen to have been told something about that privately, but I can not give my information to the public, although I wish I could.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not familiar with the question of the validity of the powder trust's patents. All I am able to say is to repeat what I have already said, that Congress last year in this bill appropriated $165,000 for the purpose of starting a powder factory for supplying the needs of the Army. There are a great many questions connected with the so-called powder trust's patents with which I am not very familiar, and I am unable to give the desired information.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We started the powder factory several years ago and enlarged it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a different powder factory.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That was smokeless powder.

Now, is the Government embarrassed in making this powder in this powder factory because some monopoly has gotten hold of all the patents?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know that. The committee was under the belief that perhaps the Government could manufacture more cheaply than it could purchase. there was a desire to have larger facilities in this country for manufacturing powder for the use of the Army, and a start has been made by the appropriation of the money required.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much does this bill carry for that purpose?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It carries nothing for that purpose, because the money already appropriated has not yet been utilized. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Max-NARD].

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from New York has just said, two fortification boards have reported the necessity of fortifications at the Virginia capes—the Endicott Board and the Taft Board.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman call my attention to that portion of the Endicott report, which I hold in my hand, which ever recommended any fortifications of this type at all there?

Mr. MAYNARD. I did not say that the Endicott Board had recommended fortifications of this type. I stated that the Endicott Board recommended fortifications on or near the Virginia capes to properly protect the Chesapeake Bay. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentlemannot at once, because that might embarrass him-but I would like him at some convenient time to indicate what page of the Endicott report contains such a recommendation.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] who has just taken his seat made the statement that the Endicott Board had made that recommendation, and as the gentleman is a member of the subcommittee that prepared this bill. I took it that the gentleman from New York was posted as to what the fortification board had reported and recommended to the Appropriation Committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will repeat to the gentleman that the Endicott Board recommended the establishment of floating batteries and the use of eighteen torpedo boats off the cape for the purpose of defending the coast, but it did not recommend the creation of this artificial island.

Mr. KEIFER. But it did recommend the importance of fortifications there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and we have fortified the Chesapeake very thoroughly.

Mr. KEIFER. Not there.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman from Iowa having been answered by the gentleman from New York, I say again that the Endicott Board had suggested what they thought was needed for the protection of Chesapeake Bay and fortifications at or near the Virginia capes. A year and a half ago the maneuvers between the Army and the Navy established the fact beyond controversy that in certain kinds of weather it was impossible for the men on the fortifications at Fortress Monroe to discover an approaching hostile fleet which sought to go up the Chesapeake and thus reach Baltimore and Washington. Now, following the realization of this fact, brought out by the maneuvers at that time, the Taft Board, after looking into this matter, has reported that it was of the first importance that the country should have fortifications at Cape Charles and Cape Henry, at the entrance of the Chesapeake, and they report in favor of an island about 50 acres in extent to be built upon the middle ground between the two channels at the entrance of Chesapeake Bay through the capes. If the island should cost $2,600,000, as claimed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer], or $6,000,000, as admitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], it is a small matter when you compare that with the commercial importance of Norfolk, Portsmouth, Richmond, Washington, and Baltimore, for if a hostile fleet could sail up through the capes they could destroy these cities or they could levy a tribute on them, and not only that, but in many, many places where the water is of sufficient depth they could land their troops, from which an attack could be delivered on Philadelphia and New York from a landing secured on the Chesapeake.

Before the civil war this Government began in Hampton Roads to fortify an island known as "Fort Wool," or the "Ripraps." They are now spending money to complete fortifications there. If they should build this island at the capes, on the middle ground between the two channels, there would be no further use of continuing this work at Fort Wool, which could only protect Norfolk, Portsmouth, and Richmond, and there is no protection against a fleet coming through the capes reaching Baltimore, Washington, and Annapolis.

But if the argument of the gentleman from New York is true, or the statement is true, that the committee did not have before it at the time it considered this matter sufficient information as to the true cost of the island, then they should have inserted in the bill which they have presented to this committee for its consideration a provision covering the necessary expenses of getting the information, authorizing the War Department to the necessary information, and providing a sufficient sum to get the information, so that at the next session of Congress or at some future session we could act intelligently with sufficient information.

I propose, when the bill comes up under the five-minute rule, to offer this amendment:

To make the necessary surveys, borings, and other investigations necessary for the preparation of an accurate detailed estimate of what it would cost to construct the proposed artificial island for fortification between Capes Charles and Henry, Chesapeake Bay, and to ascertain whether the title to the site of said proposed artificial island can be obtained without expense to the United States, $3,000.

Mr. Chairman, this is a small amount. I think this country can well afford to spend $3,000 in making a survey to determine whether it is practicable and proper and what the actual cost would be of a fortification which has been recommended by two commissions appointed by action of Congress

Mr. Chairman, beginning with April 26 of this year we propose to hold upon the waters of Hampton Roads the greatest naval review ever seen in the world. There we shall see representatives of all the navies of the world. We invite them to come and participate with us in a great peace congress; but while participating in this great peace congress, we shall lay bare to them our unpreparedness to defend the entrance to the Chesapeake capes. I say it is time now for us to act in this matter. Although we only appropriate $3,000 for the preliminary survey to ascertain what the foundation should be, how deep we will have to go, and to fix the cost of the whole project, now is the time to let it be known that while we are unprepared, yet that we are putting ourselves in a position to construct such a fortification and such a defense that all the navies of the world could nothing do to make entrance into Chesapeake Bay. [Applause.]

This is a more serious matter than the gentlemen who oppose the fortification of the Chesapeake Bay would make you believe. We have several of the best cities of this great country lying at the mercy of any hostile fleet that should invade our waters. We are at peace with all the world, and God grant that we may remain so. We know not the day and we know not the hour when this peace may be broken; and when it is broken we want to be in such a state of preparedness that no hostile force can assail our shores with any hope of

I shall, as I said before, offer this amendment under the fiveminute rule, and I hope it will be the pleasure of the House > to adopt the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to ask a question. I call the gentleman's attention to the paragraph that begins, on line 4, "For the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammuni-Does that word "ammunition" cover smokeless powder?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It does.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I would ask the gentleman if it is in the contemplation of the Department to establish a factory for smokeless powder? And in that connection, I want to call the gentleman's attention to a document that was probably laid upon his desk-it was upon mine-treating of the subject of smokeless powder, and of the extravagant expenditures that the Government have been compelled to make because of certain combinations of the manufacturers of smokeless powder. In that document it was stated that the Government had sent two of its officers to one of the arsenals, or to some Government work, for the purpose of studying the manufacture of smokeless powder; that they, in the time that belonged to the Government, with the means that the Government furnished, with the aid of other employees of the Government, with its machinery and its material for experiment, discovered certain methods for the manufacture of smokeless powder; that they afterwards secured patents for their discoveries, discoveries made by them while in the employ of the Government, mind you, aided by Government facilities; that they sold these patents to certain people now engaged in the manufacture of smokeless powder, who have entered into this combination and are compelling the Government, through the use of these patents, to pay something more than a hundred per cent above what is stated in this paper to be a fair compensation. I should like to ask the gentleman if the committee have considered that subject, if they have formed opinions with regard to the validity of those patents, and the right of anybody to exclude the Government from the use of its discoveries, made through its agencies; and if these men, now engaged in this combination, are thus using these patents that I should think might, in morals, at least, be said to belong to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it has been my purpose to reply briefly to the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Virginia. I had thought that I would defer that reply until to-morrow morning, but since the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] is complaining because the Government is doing its own manufacturing and not letting its work by contract and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is complaining because the Government is letting it by contract and not doing it itself, I shall attempt briefly to reply to both gentlemen upon that one topic to-night.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Iowa will permit me, I have not uttered any complaint. I have contented myself with trying to draw from that fountain of wisdom that I know the gentleman can open to us if he will upon this subject as to what the rights of the Government are in connection with these patents, and whether or not it has been wronged by improper and perhaps criminal methods.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. The gentleman says that I made a complaint; I have made no complaint.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have not that complete mastery of the English tougue possessed by my colleague from Iowa and the gentleman from Connecticut, and I therefore may have misrepresented my colleague from Iowa in saying that he complained, and I might have misrepresented my distinguished friend from Connecticut-

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The gentleman is absolutely right;

[Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I therefore will not indulge in any controversy as to the meaning of terms, but will proceed to reply the best I can to the suggestion made by the two distinguished

As I understand the facts, Mr. Chairman, it is the practice of the officers of the United States Army and Navy to bestow their minds to the study of problems of their profession, and when something is discovered of value in those lines to patent that invention and immediately to convey to the United States the right to produce that article in unlimited quantity without the payment of any royalty whatever, it being assumed that as between an officer of the Army or Navy and the United States Government no royalty ought to be charged. But as between these officers of the Army and Navy and the ordinary producer for general consumption among the public of any article a roy-alty ought to be paid to the genius of that Army or Navy officer, the same as to any other citizen of the United States.

And so patents upon smokeless powder were granted to these officers of the United States and the right to produce in unlimited quantities vested in the Government of the United States without the payment of any royalty whatever. If some American powder manufacturer wants to manufacture this smokeless powder for sale to any power on earth outside of the United States Government, I for one am willing that that power shall pay a royalty for the genius of that American officer in inventing the device or the powder.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman will allow me to proceed I think I will make it clear.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is clear enough so far as the gentleman

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am trying to get the whole situation before the House. In this identical case this is just what was

If I may be pardoned, I would like to ask the gentleman if this was granted to the United States for the Army and Navy or only for the Navy?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am not positive.

Mr. HULL. I think it was only for the Navy and not for the Army.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. At the last session of this Congress, for the purpose of testing the charges of Mr. Waddell, to whom the gentleman from Iowa refers, this very bill carried an appropriation to build an experimental powder plant to enable the United States Government to find out what it costs to produce the powder and whether it is being looted by the Du Ponts or That appropriation was for every dollar, that the Chief of Ordnance estimated was necessary to build that powder plant. We have given every dollar that anybody claims is necessary to establish such a plant as will ascertain the very truth as to whether the Du Ponts are obtaining extortionate prices from the Government or not. If when this powder plant is completed for which we appropriated last year the price is extortionate-if the price that is being charged by the Du Ponts is extortionate-I am in favor of building more powder plants until we are enabled to protect ourselves against the Du Pont Powder Company. But if from this experimental plant it is demonstrated that Mr. Waddell is mistaken and that we are paying a fair price to the Du Ponts, then no necessity for it -no necessity for a vast Government expenditure in order to build powder plants. So much for that question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not realize that the comparatively small sum of money provided for what he himself calls an experimental powder plant will not be a fair test of the cost of production?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not so conceive for a moment, because powder plants are constructed in comparatively small units anyway. No wise powder manufacturer would want to so concentrate his manufactory that the explosion of any part of it would destroy all of his investments, and so they are operated, unlike other enterprises, in small units, and this is a complete unit that we have provided for.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say to the gentleman that the testimony taken before our committee went to show that a larger sum of money would be required in order to make a really fair test and to make powder economically.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The Chief of Ordnance, who is the most capable man in the United States, in my judgment, upon this subject, got exactly what he asked for for this purpose. There was no shaving, no attempt to quarrel with him about the amount, but we gave him just what he said was enough to make a fair experiment upon this question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As a matter of fact, we increased it upon his suggestion that he had made an error and that he had not asked for enough.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes; after it had been put in he made that suggestion, that he had discovered the necessity for an increase, and we gave him that without any question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa, Yes. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman not think it. would be better for the United States to build its own powder factories and make its own powder than to be paying a bonus of 25 per cent more than the powder costs to the American powder

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, Mr. Chairman, if I would concede all the premises of the gentleman from Missouri, yes; but I have no information that is reliable, and will have none until this Federal powder plant is put in operation, as to what the amount is that the powder company is charging as a profit.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman if General Crozier did not state in an interview that they were now paying 25 per cent more for powder than the powder was worth. in order to encourage these private powder companies to keep on making powder?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Iowa will permit, I will state that was for metallic ammunition. stated that in the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs, that the purchase price for metallic ammunition was 25 per cent more than it would cost the Government to manufacture, and we struck out the purchase and compelled the Govern-That did not refer to powder. I think ment to manufacture. the gentleman is confusing the two.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There is a great deal of powder in metallic ammunition.

Mr. HULL. Yes; but we buy the powder and put it in the metallic ammunition, the same as other manufacturers of metallic ammunition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Since the gentleman is on his feet, will ask him a question. Does the gentleman not think the United States Government ought to make its own ammunition, whether metallic or otherwise, if it can do it cheaper's

Mr. HULL. If it can do it more cheaply and fully supply the Government; yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Didn't General Crozier say it costs 25 per cent more?

Mr. HULL. And therefore we have stricken out the power to purchase, and now do no purchasing, but confine ourselves entirely to manufacture.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. Hull], yield to a question before he sits down?

Mr. HULL. I have no time. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I will ask his colleague to yield to him.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman represents the district in which is situated the Rock Island Arsenal, where the Government makes a great many supplies for the Army. Will the gentleman tell the committee whether those products are made there or are they bought on the outside?

Mr. HULL. I do not represent that district. The Government buys nothing on the outside. We manufacture all our cavalry supplies, and artillery supplies, harness and saddles, and all the supplies of the Army which can be made at the arsenals; we manufacture all the canteens for the Army uses. We do not run in oppositon to private manufacturers, in buying part and manufacturing part, but we manufacture all that the We make all our saddles and bridles. Government uses.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How does the gentleman say that that does not come in competition with outside manufacturers? Mr. HULL. I say it does not come in competition in a way to compare cost.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why does the Government make even that amount of war supplies there? Why does not the Government buy it all on the outside?

Because it makes there different things from what people on the outside use at all. We make there a line of goods that are not used by the general public at all, and we make something that suits the Army exactly, and make it cheaper than we can buy it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Ah!

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have here in my hand certified copies of two of these patents granted to naval officers, as I understand it, granting to the United States Navy Department the privilege of manufacturing at the United States naval powder works at Indian Head, and at any other places that may hereafter be built by the Navy Department of the United States, an invention described as an improvement in "colluloid explosive, and making same;" the other being identical excepting it uses the term "making smokeless pow-It is called to my attention that these only grant the right to the Navy Department to manufacture these, and upon reflection, I am inclined to think that it has been the practice of the officers to thus limit the free use to their respective Department. Now, I want to say just a word in reply to the suggestion of my friend from Connecticut, and then I will ask the committee to rise. The gentleman from Connecticut suggests perhaps we are going too largely into the manufacturing business. These appropriations under the head of "Armament of fortifications" do authorize manufacture as well as purchase. The balance to the credit of the appropriation for the purchase, manufacture, and test of machine and automatic guns, including their carriages, etc., in December last was $257,000. of which $205,000 had been let to contracts. Six thousand five hundred and thirty-one dollars was assigned to the arsenals, and the entire record shows most of this work is in fact let by contract.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Let me interrupt the gentleman. Does not the gentleman think, as chairman of this committee in the preparation of this bill, that the Members of this House and the Senate in voting upon an appropriation bill of this kind ought to have the right to know how much of this is to be appropriated for supplies for the Army and how much is to be appropriated for manufacturing purposes? In other should the entire lump sum be placed in the hands of the Department to expend as they see fit, buy no guns, no ammunition, and expend it all, if they choose, for manufacturing purposes?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I dislike to question the right of this House to know anything that it can learn, but if the gentleman means that it would be proper for this House to insist upon knowing in advance how much was to be let to contract and how much to the manufacture in the arsenals, and how much is to be spent for machinery if they decide to manufacture at the arsenals, I say I would not think it desirable for the House to have that information, because the very object of giving this in the alternative is that the Department may determine which may be the more economical system to obtain these goods for the Government's use, and until after the money is appropriated and bids are made it is practically impossible for the Department to know which of these is more economical to the Government, and to say in advance you will determine how much shall be let to contract and how much shall be done at Government arsenals would certainly be an error. I know what the gentleman is about to say, but it is only after the Department determines how much is to be spent at arsenals that it can be determined how much will be necessary to expend for machinery at arsenals.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Let me ask another question. Under these seven or eight items, involving nearly $2,000,000, it is not necessary that the Department should buy one single dollar's worth of ammunition or guns?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not a dollar's worth under the law. Mr. HILL of Connecticut. They could expend every dollar of it for manufacturing purposes if they saw fit and have no ammunition and no guns.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Under the terms of the law?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. But the gentleman said it was not necessary to buy any under the terms of the law.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But the primary purpose and object of this appropriation is to obtain these things for the armament of fortifications.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. But that primary purpose is not served in the language of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, yes.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Because they can spend every dollar of this $2,000,000 for preparing for the manufacture of the article needed.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; they are only entitled to spend money for the machinery in the manufacture of the articles that are produced in these items, and can not spend any money for machinery if they do not manufacture.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Mann, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 23821-the fortifications appropriation bill-and had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMITTEE RESIGNATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following telegraphic communication:

MALONE, N. Y., January 14, 1907,

WM. H. FLACK

. J. G. CANNON, Speaker, Washington, D. C.:

I resign my position as member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be considered as accepted.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The Chair announced the appointment of Representative Littauer, of New York, as a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, vice Representative Flack, of New York, resigned.

FOUNTAIN AT PADUCAH, KY.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 24047) to authorize Chapter No. 376 of the Daughters of the American Revolution to erect a fountain on the property of the United States at Paducah, Ky., and that the bill be considered at the present time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Chapter No. 376 of the Daughters of the American Revolution be, and they are hereby, authorized to erect on the property of the United States at Fifth and Broadway streets, in the city of Paducah, Ky., a drinking fountain for persons.

SEC. 2. That the plan of such fountain shall be submitted to and approved by the Supervising Architect of the United States, and the place where said drinking fountain is to be erected shall be fixed by the Supervising Architect, and the work of erecting same shall be under his direction or supervision.

SEC. 3. That the fountain herein authorized to be erected shall at all times be subject to removal upon the order of the United States, and before erecting the same the said Chapter No. 376 of the Daughters of the American Revolution, shall execute bond in the penal sum of $1,000, conditioned to pay to the Government of the United States any damage it may sustain by reason of the erection of said fountain, or the bursting of any water pipe, or any damage or injury to the property of the Government.

The SPEAKED Listberg chication?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether the United States Government would have to pay for the water used in the fountain?

Mr. JAMES. Certainly not. The Government is to be at absolutely no expense whatever.

Mr. MANN. Of course there is nothing in the bill on that point to indicate whether the city of Paducah donates the water or whether the Government would be charged for it. I am perfectly willing to take the gentleman's word for it.

Mr. JAMES. There is no provision in the bill that would in any way bring cost upon the Government, and under the terms of the bond given by the Daughters of the American Revolution there would be no damage done to the United States in any way.

Mr. PAYNE. What is this reservation used for?

Mr. JAMES. It is the lot upon which the custom-house is situated. There is no drinking fountain there at all. This is to be erected in honor of the soldiers of the American Revolu-tion by the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mr. MANN. What use do they have for a drinking fountain [Laughter.] in Kentucky?

Mr. JAMES. This is for women only, I think. [Laughter.] Mr. PAYNE. I notice the bill did not say whether it was to use water or not. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] assumes that they are going to use water, but the bill does not specify. [Laughter.] Mr. JAMES. It is pure water.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask a question. It is the custom when we have public buildings erected in the country to have an open driveway of 50 feet all around the building when it is not adjacent to the street. Now, is there room for the fountain on the reservation and for this open way?

Mr. JAMES. There is no room for a driveway around this public building at all. There is a driveway where the mail of the United States is put into the post-office.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no complete driveway around that building now?

Mr. JAMES. There is no room for any driveway around the building at all.

I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Mr. PAYNE. Keifer] that the open space about a Government building is provided for fire purposes, and of course this fountain would not interfere with the fire purposes.

Mr. KEIFER. The custom has been to have a place around these post-offices both for fire protection and a driveway.

Mr. PAYNE. No; for fire protection. I think that is the language of the statute in each case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The question was taken.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. James, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid upon the table.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE HON. ROBERT R. HITT.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following

The Clerk read as follows:

That there be a session of the House on Sunday, February 17, 1907, at 12 o'clock m., which shall be set apart for memorial addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. ROBERT R. HITT, late a Representative from the Thirteenth Congressional district of Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the order will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I move that the House do now adjourn, Mr. Speaker.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21194) to authorize J. F. Andrews, J. W. Jourdan, their heirs, representatives, associates, and assigns, to construct dams and power stations on Bear River, on the south-east quarter of section 31, township 5, range 11, in Tishomingo County, Miss., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6378); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21402) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Gregg Shoals, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6379); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21677) to amend an act granting to the Davenport Water Power Company rights to construct and maintain a canal, power station, and appurtenant works in the Mississippi River in Scott County, Iowa, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6380); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RYAN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 22135) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ashley River, in the counties of Charleston and Colleton, S. C., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6381); which said bill and report were referred to the House

Calendar

Mr. HOGG, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 23650) to quiet title to lands on Jicarilla Reservation, and to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause allotments to be made, and to dispose of the merchantable timber, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6382); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 23718) to authorize the Chicago, Lake Shore and South Bend Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Calumet River in the State of Indiana, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6383); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GRONNA, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. 81) authorizing temporary leaves of absence for homestead settlers, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 6387); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 4023, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 744) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of James D. Lane, accompanied by a report

(No. 6216); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 15661, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 745) referring to the Court of Claims the papers, in the case of Elijah Edington, accompanied by a report (No. 6217); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PATTERSON of South Carolina, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 16531, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 746) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of Columbia Baptist Church, of Barnwell County, S. C., accompanied by a report (No. 6218); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LEE, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 18479, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 747) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of the Oothcaloga Baptist Church, of Adairsville, Bartow County, Ga., accompanied by a report (No. 6219); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 18480, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 748) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of the Baptist Church of Calhoun, Ga., accompanied by a report (No. 6220); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PATTERSON of South Carolina, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 19140, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 749) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of A. R. Speaks, accompanied by a report (No. 6221); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 19356, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 750) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of Steep Bottom Baptist Church, of Hampton County, S. C., accompanied by a report (No. 6222); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 19423, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 751) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of Bethesda Baptist Church, of Bamberg County, S. C., accompanied by a report (No. 6223); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 20197, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (II. Res. 752) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of the estate of Q. K. Underwood, deceased, accompanied by a report (No. 6224); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADDITIONS TO ROCK CREEK PARK.

Mr. SCOTT. I am directed by the joint committee authorized by section 25 of an act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, etc., to take into consideration the advisability of purchasing a proposed addition to Rock Creek Park, the socalled "Meridian Hill site," the so-called "Carpenter and Pennsylvania Avenue Heights tracts," and the so-called "Montrose tract," on Georgetown Heights, for park purposes, to submit a repart. I ask that it may be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Congress:

The joint committee authorized by section 25 of an act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, etc., to take into consideration the advisability of purchasing a proposed addition to Rock Creek Park, the so-called "Meridian Hill site," the so-called "Carpenter and Pennsylvania Avenue Heights tracts," and the so-called "Montrose tract," on Georgetown Heights, for park purposes, beg leave to rose tract." on Georgetown Heights, for park purposes, beg leave to report as follows:

Your committee has given much attention to the hearings held at various times before the District Committees of both Houses, and, after thoroughly examining the testimony presented, made a careful personal inspection of each of the proposed sites.

It found, in reference to the proposition for the purchase of the so-called "Carpenter tract," that beyond the Eastern Branch of the Anacosita River there is no large public park, and that there is a popular demand and necessity for such a reservation. This tract is beautifully located, covered with timber, and affords a magnificent view of the city. It contains about 140 acres and can be purchased at a much lower price now than in the future.

The committee found that that section of the city formerly known as Georgetown is entirely lacking in parks, and are of the opinion that the Montrose tract, on Georgetown Heights, is the most desirable and reasonable in that locality.

The proposed addition to Rock Creek Park runs along the western boundary of Rock Creek and extends up the valley of a small branch running approximately parallel to Massachusetts avenue. The valley of this branch is very deep, and the land abutting the creek is covered with a growth of large and beautiful trees. This land has been owned by two or three different estates, and up to the present time the property remains undeveloped. It comprises about 88 acres, and its addition to Rock Creek Park would be of great benefit not only to that section of the city, but to the beautification of the park itself. It is easy of access and within a few years will undoubtedly be surrounded by quite a dense population.

The acquisition of the land contained in Hall and Elban's subdivision, or Meridian Hill, is believed to be particularly desirable, About 10 acres lie between Euclid street, Columbia avenue or Fifteenth street, with street or Florida avenue, and Sixteenth street extended. The reservation proposed is similar to the smaller reservations or parks now existing throughout the District of Columbia, such as Lincenth street, and the proposed is park in the midst of one of the densely populated portions of the city would demonstrate its utility as well as its beauty. In addition, this proposed reservation might also be utilized for governmental purposes, such as the construction of buildings, the laying out of garde

INSANE ASYLUM IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. DICK. The bill (H. R. 13675) to ratify and confirm the acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Oklahoma, passed in the year 1905, relating to an insane asylum for the Territory of Oklahoma, and providing for the establishment and maintenance of an insane asylum for the Territory of Oklahoma at Fort Supply, in Woodward County, Okla., and making appropriations therefor, was reported from the Committee on Territories on a poll of the committee. For the purpose of making a formal report, I ask that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. Mr. DICK. I now report the bill back from the Committee on Territories favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consid-

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL PRISON CONFERENCE,

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following order, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the report of the Commissioner for the United States on the International Prison Commission of the proceedings of the seventh International Prison Conference, held at Budapest, September 3-9, 1906, be printed as a document.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS FOR THE PHILIPPINE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. PLATT. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 19754) to provide for the distribution of public documents to the library of the Philippine government at Manila, P. I., and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to its consideration. It directs the superintendent of documents to supply one copy of each document delivered to him for distribution to State and Territorial libraries and designated depositories to the library of the Philippine government, in the city of Manila, P. I.; and the Public Printer is directed to print, bind, and deliver to the superintendent of documents the extra number of documents required to comply with this act.

Mr. KNOX introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 83) authorizing the building of dams and locks Nos. 1, 2, and 3 in the Youghlogheny River, Pennsylvania; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19003) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and to provide for the payment of French spoliation claims recommended by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved January 20, 1885, and March 3, 1891, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BURKETT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $140,000 for the acquisition of about 16,000 acres of land adjacent to the military reservation at Fort Robinson, Nebr., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KITTREDGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $8,200 to pay certain Sioux Indians at the Rosebud Agency, S. Dak., for losses claimed to have been sustained by these Indians on account of property taken from them by the United States military authorities in the years 1876, 1877, and 1878, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 for completing the industrial and domestic building, etc., at the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $6,000 for the erection of a laundry building at the Canton, S. Dak., Indian Insane Asylum, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that there may be a reprint of the bill (8. 4403) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903, as amended by the House of Representatives and now in conference between the two Houses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks for the reprint of a bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HENRY W. BLAIR.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7337) granting a pension to Henry W. Blair. The bill was reported favorably from the Committee on Pensions yesterday. There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry W. Blair, late lieutenant-colonel Fifteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend the amendment by sub-ituting "seventy-two dollars" for "fifty dollars." I think stituting this is a case that does not need any argument, so I will leave it to the Senate.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Mr. FORAKER. I ask that Senate resolution 208 be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution indicated by the Senator from Ohio, which will be stated.

The Secretary. Senate resolution 208, directing the Committee on Military Affairs to investigate the Brownsville (Tex.)

affray, etc.
Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, yesterday when I yielded the floor I was in the midst of a colloquy with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], with whom I agree in part, but with whom I am compelled in part to disagree. I would not minimize, and never have consciously, the power of Congress, nor would I exaggerate in anywise the power of the Executive, My proposition-and I do not intend to spend much time upon -concedes to Congress the full power which I think it possesses under the Constitution with reference to the Army, and it is very large, of course.

Congress is given power to raise and maintain armies and to provide a navy. The size of the Army is entirely for Congress to determine. The character of the Army as to different branches of the service is entirely for Congress to determine. The grade of officers and the number of officers are for Congress to determine. The oath of enlistment, the contract of enlistment are for Congress to determine. The duration of the term of enlistment is for Congress to determine. The pay and all that is for Congress to determine. The establishment of military tribunals, the definition of military offenses, the method of military trials, and the punishment that is to be administered are for Congress to determine. Congress determines where it will have military posts and where it will not, in time of peace, at least.

Congress may reduce the Army and provide for the muster out of officers, as it has often done, and may provide for the discharge of enlisted men, as it has always done, and which is always a part of the contract of enlistment. Congress can not make a contract for service in the Army with an officer, or, I think, with an enlisted man, which would be a contract protected by the Constitution of the United States against the power of the same or a succeeding Congress to reduce the Army, muster out officers, and discharge enlisted men.

See Crenshaw v. United States, Mr. Justice Lamar (134 U. S.

The power of Congress to make rules for the "government and regulation" is a large one, but it is manifestly to be exercised in the manner clearly indicated by the clause itself.

I can not agree with the Senator from Georgia that the Commander in Chief, either in time of peace or war, is under the supreme control of Congress. The Constitution need not have made the President the Commander in Chief. Wisely, however, it did so, combining with executive power the power of command. It is conceded by the distinguished Senator-from Ohio that in the absence of Congressional rules the President as Commander in Chief, the Congress having raised and appropriated money for the support of an army, but having failed to make rules for its government would, ex necessitate rei, have the power to make those necessary for the government of the Army and Navy. That would not be simply because of necessity, I think, but because the Constitution has made the President Commander in Chief without defining the functions. volves the power to do those things which inhere in the office or are necessary to the discharge of the duties of the office.

The Constitution is to be read as a whole, and provisions pari materia are to be read together, each in the light of the other. No clause in the Constitution is to be so construed as to destroy another clause or clauses.

Now, I admit the power of Congress over the subject of enlist-I admit Congress may say properly that no enlisted man shall be discharged before the expiration of his term of enlistment except upon the finding of a board of officers. I admit that the Congress may provide that no man shall be reenlisted unless his service during the preceding term was honest and faithful. This is one of the "rules" made by Congress now in force. I admit that Congress might provide-it would not-that men who shall have been dishonorably discharged by sentence of court-martial may be reenlisted in the Army upon making satisfactory proof to a board or complying with such others terms as the Congress might provide as showing changed behavior.

But there must be a distinction between the words "Congress may make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces" and the words "Congress shall govern the land and naval forces." The one would make the power to govern absolute; the other is restrictive as to the manner in which the governmental power of Congress shall be exercised. I repeat on the point a few sentences already read, which certainly

It is true that the Constitution has conferred upon Congress the exclusive power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;" that the two powers are distinct; neither can trench upon the other; the President can not, under the disguise of military orders, evade the legislative regulations by which he in common with the Army must be governed, and Congress can not in the disguise of "rules for the government" of the Army impair the authority of the President as Commander in Chief. (28 Court of Claims,

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator give the citation?
Mr. SPOONER. It is 28 Court of Claims, the Swaim case, In that case it was held, and affirmed by the Supreme Court, that the President by virtue of his function as Commander in Chief may order a general court-martial.

Now, Mr. President, is there no function that is not subject to the control of Congress involved in the designation "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States?" I have never heard it denied until yesterday that the assignment of officers to particular commands and the disposition of troops throughout the country was not a part of the power of command, and I was amazed that a lawyer of the great ability of my friend from Georgia should suggest—I do not know that he would contend for it—that Congress can provide that a particular officer shall be assigned to a particular troop or that where a regiment or a company has been assigned by the Commander in Chief to a particular State Congress can by resolution, which has the effect of law, countermand that order. If that is correct, it may fix the designation or location to which that command shall be transferred. I never heard it suggested before, Mr. President, that as commander of the Army and Navy the President has not the power to send the war ships hither and you as in his judgment is best for the country and

The President, as Commander in Chief, acting through the Secretary of War, having lawfully assigned a colored battalion or a colored regiment to Texas for duty, Congress could not constitutionally pass a resolution revoking that order, or, if it had been executed, requiring the President to transfer those troops from Texas to some other State. If the intense construction which the Senator from Georgia puts upon the word "government" in this clause is the law, the Constitution did not constitute the President Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, but constituted him the Adjutant-General of the Congress, and gave him no power to issue a military order in time of peace not revocable and supplantable by a joint resolution of Congress.

Pomeroy says of the powers of the Commander in Chief, inter alia, on page 472:

The President's duties in respect to these various subjects may thus be clearly defined and controlled by the legislature—

Indicating matters of Congressional jurisdiction with which

But in time of peace he has an independent function. He commands the Army and Navy; Congress does not. He may make all dispositions of troops and officers, stationing them now at this post, now at that; he may send out naval vessels to such parts of the world as he pleases; he may distribute the arms, ammunition, and supplies in such quantities and at such arsenals and depositories as he deems best. All this is a work of ordinary routine in time of peace, and is probably left, in fact, to the Secretaries of War and of the Navy and to military officers high in command.

The inevitable effect of the construction contended for by the Senator must lead to its rejection. If the power of Congress over the Army and over the Commander in Chief of the Army is as broad as he suggests, there is no order in time of peace which the President can make himself or through the Secretary of War which can not be countermanded or set aside by an act of Congress dealing solely with that order. If the Commander in Chief makes a lawful order discharging A. B. from the Army for the good of the service, he or some friend appeals to a Senator or Member of Congress to introduce and work for the passage of a joint resolution restoring A. B. to the Army, or, in effect, revoking the order of the Commander in Chief. It would be contended that a stigma had been put unjustly upon this man; that he had been discharged from the Army without a hearing; that he had been denied the right, which all men should have, to a "day in court." There would be no limit to the cases in which Congress would be asked to sit as a court of appeals for the review of errors committed by the Commander in Chief in individual cases and to set them aside. through the Army the Congress, not the Commander in Chief, would be the ultimate power in the minds of enlisted men, and if anything can be imagined which would be destructive of discipline in the Army it would be such a system. Does the Senator think that an order lawfully made by the Commander in Chief, discharging without honor A. B., could be revoked by the Congress.

not expect to take any part in this debate; I am agreeing with the Senator upon the conclusion he reaches; but I am simply differing from him as to the particular road over which he travels to reach it. But as the Senator directs himself to me so pointedly in the inquiry he has just propounded, without undertaking to go into any general discussion of the matter-which I am sure he recognizes would be improper and which I would not desire to do at this time-I simply call his attention, in response to the inquiry directly addressed to me by the Senator himself, to the fact that I presume he has in innumerable instances voted to correct the military record of soldiers who have been convicted by courts-martial of desertion.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. And correcting their record by name, legislating directly upon the point.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Of course, the Senator will excuse me from elaborating or answering at large; but I simply suggest the possibility that that may be a reply to the inquiry propounded to me by the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, Mr. President, there can be no question but that would not be a rule for the regulation and government of the Army.

Mr. BACON. No; but, as I understood the Senator, his inquiry was addressed to the point whether or not Congress could legislate as to the particular individual, regarding anything which had been done by the direct order of the President. An order of a court-martial is under the authority of the President; and when a man is discharged by the judgment of a court-martial, he is practically discharged by order of the President. inquiry of the Senator was, whether or not Congress could by legislation directly overturn the order of the President dismissing a man. It can overturn the order of a court-martial and restore a man to the rolls with honor, and make him eligible to draw a pension. It seems to me that that probably would be a case such as the Senator suggests.

Mr. SPOONER. No, Mr. President. There are a great many cases, thousands of them, cases that occurred during the war, cases as to officers and cases as to enlisted men, having nothing whatever to do with the current discipline of the Army, cases in which, during the excitement and the haste and the tumult of war, injustice has been done to soldiers, dishonorable discharges and dismissals from the Army by the President, and all that, in which Congress has afforded relief. But Congress has never passed an act upon the theory that it restored those men to the Army; that it made void the act of the President or the act of the court-martial.

Mr. BACON. I think that was done in the case of General Fitz-John Perter.

Mr. SPOONER. In the case of the naval cadets who had been dismissed by a court-martial, and as to whom we acted a year or so ago, they were not eligible under the law to reentry in the Naval Academy, and we passed a bill authorizing the President, in his discretion-thus removing the bar which Congress itself had imposed upon a reenlistment except for good and faithful service-authorizing the President to reappoint those men to the Naval Academy. So in the case of Fitz-John Porter. Mr. President, there was no attempt to review or to set aside the sentence of the court-martial or the order discharging him pursuant to its sentence. That was not reviewed, except for the purpose of ascertaining whether Congress would authorize the President to reappoint him.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Did not the President veto the Fitz-John Porter bill on the precise ground that Congress had no power to compel him to appoint any given man?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; the bill was vetoed—unquestionably.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; the bill was vetoed—unquestionably.
Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he will not kindly repropound the inquiry? I did not hear it.

Mr. LODGE. I said that President Arthur had vetoed the Fitz-John Porter bill on the ground, as I recall it, that Congress had no right to compel him to appoint any man by name.

Mr. BACON. Yes. Mr. LODGE. Which view has been universally sustained ever Now, when we wish to restore a man either to the Army or to the Navy we simply give the President discretion to do it if he chooses, and he need not do it if he does not want to.

Mr. BACON. I understand. Now, if the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me a moment-

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

oked by the Congress.

Mr. BACON. There is no doubt about the correctness of the Mr. BACON. I do not want to interrupt the Senator; I did statement of the proposition made by the Senator from Massachusetts, but it has no relation whatever to the question. The absence of the right of Congress to name a man who shall be appointed is dependent upon the clause of the Constitution which distinctly gives to the President of the United States the power of appointment both in civil and in military cases. It has no possible relation to this question. But in the case of the soldier who has been convicted of desertion and whose disabilities are distinctly removed, there arises no such question. There is a distinct proposition on the part of Congress to set aside that which had been determined by a court-martial under the authority of the President as Commander in Chief, not generally, but as to the distinct individual. It is done here every day; more often than I think it ought to be done.

Mr. SPOONER. I think so, too. There have been too many, but they do not bring the men back into the Army. not impeach the validity of sentences of a court-martial, or of executed orders lawfully made. A man whose service has been lawfully terminated can not again become a member of the Army except by reenlistment. That contract is at an end, and he can not become a member of the Army without a new contract. The bar of reenlistment might be removed by a general rule. not think it can be as to an individual case, or in individual cases similar to thousands of other cases. Of course Congress has absolute control over pensions.

I have never heard it claimed that Congress could revoke a valid order discharging a man, and thereby bring him back into the Army, or require that the President should reenlist him.

An act restoring these men or one of them to the Army would not in any sense whatever be a rule for the government and regulation of the Army. It would be an order or edict revoking the order made by the President for their discharge. Mr. President if the Senate of the Regulation of the dent, if the Senator from Georgia is correct, there is no order which the Commander in Chief may make under the Constitution or the law which the Congress can not revoke and set. aside; and that is, I submit, a dangerous proposition.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me a moment? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPOONER. I do. Mr. BACON. I repeat I do not desire to pursue the discussion, because I want the Senator to go on with his argument; but I desire simply to have my position correctly understood, and then I am perfectly willing for the Senator to combat it.

The Senator says that it is a dangerous proposition that Congress has supreme control over the Army and over the Commander in Chief of the Army. I simply desire to state, in response to that, that to my mind there could be no more dangerous proposition than that the great power of the Army and of the Navy, with all of the men who are embraced in them, and all the power given by the consolidation of all of these men, with all of their arms and munitions at the will of one man—there could be, to my mind, no more dangerous proposition than that that immense power, that irresistible power, is in the control and under the power of any one man, free from the control of the lawmaking power of this Government. That is my proposition.

So far as its discussion is concerned, of course that is manifestly impossible in colloquy, and I shall endeavor, unless the Senator appeals to me very directly, not to interfere with the course of his argument. I am content with a statement in opposition to what he has stated as to what I consider the dangerous proposition. I think just exactly the opposite to what he does as to where the danger lies. The danger does not lie in the control of Congress. No people were ever yet subjugated or had their liberty permanently overturned by a deliberative body. Many peoples have had them overturned and been subjugated when power was lodged in the hands of one man.

If there was one single principle which was sought to be embodied in our Constitution, one single principle upon which republican government must rest for its security, it is that absolute power shall not be given to any one man, and if there is one influence which runs through the entire Constitution it is the influence which seeks to take away from any one man supreme power and put in the Congress of the United States, the lawmaking power of the United States-which consists, as the Senator knows, both of the Congress and the Presidentas the Senator knows, both of the Congress and the Freshent—all of that supreme, power. As I said on yesterday, in alluding to the second division, I think it is, of the first article of the Constitution, all the great powers of government are enumerated in that splendid delegation of power. In the powers delegated to Congress every royal power heretofore exercised by kings—let Senators analyze it and see whether or not I make too broad a statement—every solitary sovereign power theretofore exercised by kings, with the single exception of the pardoning power, was distinctly delegated to the Congress without exception.

If there is any possibility of doubt as to whether or not the construction the Senator puts upon it is correct—and of course there must be a possibility, or he would not contend for it; there must be a probability, or he would not contend for itto my mind there can be no question of the general purpose of the Constitution to put the power in Congress and not rest it in the power of any one man. If that were the purpose it would be defeated if the Constitution is to be construed so that the word "government" can be qualified, because if it can be qualified to one degree it can be qualified to another, and if it can be qualified it is a question as to who shall qualify it. The President? Then he can qualify it so as to say that while this particular element of government is within the Congress when it comes to the Army, there is another particular feature of it which belongs to him, and ultimately, as I said on yesterday, the whole thing can be chipped away until the power of Congress becomes a mere shadow, and the substance of it is in the Executive. I beg the Senator's pardon for intruding so long.

Mr. SPOONER. I will not look at the Senator again, for if I do he considers that I am attacking him or his views.

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. SPOONER. I have heard the Senator make that speech before.

Mr. BACON. If I could make it well, if I could express the idea in my mind, I could not make it too often.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator always makes it well; but, Mr. President, it is absolutely inaccurate; it is in distinct contradiction of the whole philosophy of this Government; it is in utter disregard of the Constitution itself and of the distribution by the Constitution of power.

Absolute power in government in some degree has to be lodged somewhere. In our Government it is divided. The executive power, including power in respect of civil or military affairs, is given by the Constitution to the President, not to the Congress. The legislative power of the Government-and all lawyers know what that means—is given absolutely into the hands of Congress. The President has been given the power, when, in his judgment, it is wise, to say "stop;" to afford a locus pænitentiæ to the Congress—an opportunity to reconsider—but under the Constitution it is in the absolute power of Congress, not-withstanding the President's objections, after they have been considered, to enact the law without his signature. If there be not a sufficient number to override the veto of the President, of course, the bill fails; but if it is the general sentiment of the Congress to enact a law, the President can not prevent it any more than the Congress, after the law has been enacted, can execute it.

And so of the judicial power, Mr. President. That is "vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." The judicial power of the Constitution is beyond the reach of the Congress and of the Executive. Neither can exercise judicial functions.

The validity of the President's order of discharge can be tested any day. Any one of the 167 men who were discharged by this order can go into the Court of Claims and sue for his pay and test the question whether the President in ordering this discharge was beyond his lawful authority. It is a judicial function. Congress may properly only investigate with a view to changing existing rules for future operation.

In all these cases, Mr. President, except as to Members of Congress, there is but one remedy for the abuse of power. That is a remedy provided by the Constitution directly and indirectly, and it is the exclusive remedy.

Congress can not remove a judge of a "constitutional court" of the United States; the President can not remove a judge of a "constitutional court" of the United States. They can be impeached, but they can only be removed by the judgment and sentence of the men who sit in this Chamber, having taken an oath to act as judges.

Each House is given the power to protect itself against corruption in its membership, and that is a power that is absolute. It is not open to review by any other branch of the Government. It is beyond the reach of courts and Presidents. It is the power of expulsion.

Great discretionary power has been given to the President' the United States. Early in the history of the Government of the United States. the President was given the power to call into active service-I have referred to it before-

Whenever the United States shall be invaded-

It does not say when he thinks it shall be invaded-

Whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to call forth such number of the militia of the State or States most convenient to the place of danger, or the scene of action, as he may judge necessary to repel such invasion.

The exercise of that power by the President was attacked upon the ground that there was no invasion, nor imminent danger of invasion. That is a tremendous power.

Mr. BACON. That is a statutory power.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; it is a statutory power.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to say, for fear that I might be misunderstood by those who did not hear me make the statement previously, that I entirely agree with the Senator that the President had the right to summarily discharge these troops. The only point of difference between the Senator and myself is that the Senator thinks the President has that right as a constitutional power, which can not be taken from him—
Mr. SPOONER. I have not claimed that. I am not obliged to claim that.

Mr. BACON. I think that he exercises the power under the statutes and under the Army Regulations, passed in pursuance of statutory law.

Mr. SPOONER. That is sufficient.

Mr. BACON. Yes; I think it is amply sufficient. Mr. SPOONER. If he has lawfully exercised it.

Mr. BACON. I think he has.

Mr. SPOONER. If he has abused his power or usurped a power under circumstances for which he should be called to account, this is not the place to investigate it.

Mr. BACON. Now, the Senator— Mr. SPOONER. I will leave that out. Mr. BACON. The Senator has reached a point now on which I am not taking issue with him, and I have very grave doubts myself as to the contrary of what he states being true. I shall be very glad to hear from him on that line.

Mr. SPOONER. Human agencies, of course, must be employed in human governments, and in all human agencies there is the weakness; common to humanity. The framers of the Constitution knew when they drew this instrument that power, absolute power, must be lodged somewhere. They lodged the power of pardon absolutely in the President, left it entirely to his discretion, not subject to restriction or review by the Congress or by the courts. That is a great power. It would be an awful power in bad hands—the power to let loose, if a President were insane enough, the vilest of murderers and the most dangerous of assassins, lawbreakers, all over the land. But the power was lodged with the President, responsible only to public opinion for its exercise, and of course responsible in the manner provided by the Constitution for a corrupt exercise of it.

There has never been much abuse of power by the President in this country from the civil or military standpoint. There has been as much by Congress. If my recollection serves me aright, I have heard great denunciation at times against the legislation of Congress in the reconstruction acts and in various acts which affected sections, and in the light of to-day we can all see action by the Congress which was unwise. The Congress is not perfect. It is not the embodiment of human wisdom in the aggregate. It makes mistakes that are hurtful to the people, but it is responsible only to the people, and its acts are to be set aside only by the tribunal appointed for the purpose under the Constitution.

But, Mr. President, I pass from this phase of the subject, greatly regretting, notwithstanding its undoubted importance, to have spent so much time upon it. I have discussed it because it is the basis of my objection to the pending resolution, which is essentially a resolution to investigate the discharge of these men which was the act of the President. The distinguished Senator from Ohio has stated that he does not care merely for form of words, and his willingness to so remodel his amendment as that it shall provide for an investigation of the facts of the Brownsville affair without reference to the discharge of the enlisted men. There may be excellent reasons oftentimes why Congress should investigate facts, solely for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not reason exists for changing existing laws for future operation either as to the Army or otherwise.

Mr. President, I am not opposed to this investigation and have not been. I really do not know of anyone who is. I would have been better satisfied if the President had ordered a court of inquiry or a board of officers, entitled under the statute to summon witnesses, to administer oaths, so that under the forms of judicial procedure, with examination and cross-examination, this matter might have been investigated and every method known to such procedure exhausted, in order that those who were guilty might be identified, thereby identifying also the But it is plain enough that the President had a right to choose the method. He could have chosen either of the former, or he could lawfully commit the investigation to the officials of the Army, which he did. I am not sure what any of us would have done in his place differently from what he did.

Further inquiry into it is, at all events, without an investigation, probably impossible.

If the President had not included in his order the provision forever disqualifying the discharged soldiers from reenlistment, its legal effect would have been the same, for section 2 of the act of August 1, 1894, volume 28, page 216, provides that-

Hereafter all enlistments in the Army shall be for the term of three years, and no soldier shall be again enlisted in the Army whose service during his last preceding term of enlistment has not been honest and faithful.

A discharge without honor, under article 4, by the proper authorities would be a bar under the statute to reenlistment. I think, therefore, that part of the order is merely declaratory of existing law, except, possibly, as to the use of the word "for-ever." Of course its use could not prevent the Congress from enacting a rule upon the subject of reenlistments which would include these men. I see no theory upon which the validity of the portion of the order which attempted to forever or at all bar the discharged soldiers from serving in any civil capacity under the Government can be sustained. That disqualification could not be imposed upon conviction by a civil court, unless the law had provided it as part of the punishment. The message of to-day informs us that the President has reached that conclusion and, with characteristic promptness, has revoked that part of the order. The prophecy of the Senator from Ohio, in his speech the other day, that the President would, if he became convinced that the order was in any respect invalid, promptly revoke it was well justified.

POWER TO DISCHARGE.

Mr. President, I have proceeded upon the assumption that, barring the disqualification to which I have just referred, the order of the President was lawfully made, and I come now to the question whether the President possessed authority to discharge these enlisted men without honor.

Of course it is true as to this case, as the Judge-Advocate-General decided in 1891, in the case of the Fourth Cavalry, then stationed at Walla Walla, that the President has no power to stationed at Walla Walla, that the President has no power to disturb the legislative organization of the Army. Congress has, in the exercise of an unquestionable power, settled that matter. It has determined how many companies shall constitute a regiment of infantry and of cavalry and artillery, how many men shall constitute the maximum and the minimum of each; and this organization can not be changed except by Congress. If all the members of a company are destroyed it would not destroy the organization. It could be filled up by transfer or enlist-ment. There is no pretense that the President attempted to affect the organization. His order discharged without honor certain men, members of companies B, C, and D of the Twenty fifth Infantry, serving at Brownsville, August 13, 1906. It did not embrace all the enlisted men of either company. It did not deal with organizations.

Mr. MALLORY. He discharged the men.
Mr. SPOONER. Yes; he discharged individuals. I presume by this time the organizations have been filled up. Men were ordered transferred from other companies, so as to give each company in the battalion its minimum, including those who were not discharged.

Mr. President, the question of power turns altogether, I think, on the construction of article 4 of the Articles of War, as to which able arguments have been made by Senators on the other side of the Chamber and by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on this side. I think he is the only Senator on this side of the Chamber who has spoken, aside from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker], who, with his accustomed ability, has certainly said all that can be said upon his side of the question.

I do not care to repeat much of what has already been said, but to my mind it is a perfectly plain proposition that the President had lawful power, to be exercised in his discretion, not in yours or mine, to discharge these men without honor from the military service of the United States.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] showed that this article, in substance, has been in force as long as the Army of the United States under the Constitution, almost, has been in existence. I do not believe it will ever be repealed. believe the time will ever come when the Congress will deal such a blow to the discipline of the Army as to deprive the Commander in Chief of the power to discharge from the service men whom he thinks ought not for the good of the service to remain in it.

One man, without committing a court-martial offense, can demoralize the discipline of a good part of a company. Senators who have been soldiers have known it to be done. He may be guilty of mischief, of things that are not cognizable by court-martial, exerting influence of one sort or another which renders it absolutely adverse to the public interest that that person shall remain in the Army. I remember one such instance in my own There are a great many times when the public experience. interest requires the discharge of a man or more than one man from a company, and for reasons, too, which would not justify a dishonorable discharge, which would not justify a sentence by court-martial, and for reasons, sometimes, which might hardly justify a discharge without honor; but the public interest demands the severance of the man's relation with the Army.

The fourth article of war is as follows:

No enlisted man, duly sworn, shall be discharged from the service without a discharge in writing.

That is absolute. Even a man sentenced by court-martial to be dishonorably discharged gets his discharge paper. "No man," it says; and the discharge is to be-signed by a field officer of the regiment to which he belongs, or by the commanding officer when no field officer is present.

This follows:

and no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before his term of service has expired, except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial.

It is not necessary to discuss whether the President, as Commander in Chief, possesses inherent power to terminate the contract of enlistment, Some lawyers think he does. Others think he does not. I do not know. This language does not negative it. It is restrictive language. No one can give a discharge to an enlisted man before the expiration of his term of service except these named officials and a court-martial; and of course naming the two who, without this authority, could not do it, if they had not named the President it would seem as if it were an attempt to exclude him.

So it stands now that the President, the Secretary of War, the department commander, or a court-martial can discharge an enlisted man from the service before the expiration of his term of service. Will some one tell me what limitation is put by that statute upon this power? The Senator from Ohio seems to think there is some. How and to what extent may this power to discharge enlisted men be exercised? The statute contains no limitation. It may be exercised as to one man or fifty men or a hundred and fifty men without violating any express or implied limitation in the statute. One looks in vain for any limitation upon the power. Will some one tell me what definition it makes as to the grounds upon which this power may be exercised? That also is left entirely without definition.

Another part of the statute qualifies it to this extent, that no man shall be dishonorably discharged except by the last-named power—a court-martial. I am unable to find either in logic or in the statutes anything which abridges the discretion of the President, the Secretary of War, or the department commander in the exercise of this power. Perhaps it ought to be restricted. The Congress may conclude some time to define the grounds or reasons which shall regulate its exercise. I do not believe it. At all events, the Senator who asserts that there is a limitation as to the number or as to the grounds upon which the power may be exercised ought to point it out. It has not been done.

It can not be done, in my opinion.

The article uses the words "shall be given." That might imply that this power is only to be exercised—and my good friend, the Senator from Ohio, has almost implied that—upon the request of the soldier. That will not answer, because no soldier ever "requests" to be sentenced by a court-martial, and this word "given" applies also where the discharge is by sentence of a court-martial.

The Supreme Court, in the case of United States v. Sweet (189 U. S., 471), had occasion to consider the meaning of the word "discharge," in connection with travel pay, and also generally. Senators remember that it is provided by the Revised Statutes, section 1289, as amended by act of February 27, 1877 (19 Stat. L., 243), that travel pay, etc., is allowed "when an officer is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense." The same thing is provided as to enlisted men by section 1290, Revised Statutes.

In this case a lieutenant from Minnesota, by the name of Sweethe was a second lieutenant of volunteers in the Army—tendered his resignation and was honorably discharged October 15, 1898, having been mustered in at St. Paul, his residence being Minneapolis, and he was not allowed travel pay. He sued for it in the Court of Claims, contending that under the statute every one discharged from the Army, officer or soldier, was entitled to the travel pay, unless he was discharged by way of punishment for a specific offense. The court held in the case, in accordance with the long-established rule of the Army, administered so long and so uninterruptedly as to have the force of law, that he was not entitled to travel pay because he had resigned. The court, through Mr. Justice Holmes, said:

It follows that the only question is whether the meaning of the long-used phrase is too clear for almost equally long-established practice to control. It seems to us not to be so. It is quite true that in the military service the word "discharge" is the word applied to an order ending the service of an officer at his own request. But in other connections it conveys the notion of a movement beginning with the superior and more or less adverse to the object, as, for instance, when we speak of discharging a servant. Usually it is a slightly discrediting verb. If it is taken in its ordinary meaning here, the exception in case of a discharge by way of punishment raises no difficulty, because a discharge on resignation is not within the meaning of the principal clause.

And then they add that it is usual to state, as it is, on all discharges, except by way of punishment, that the soldier is entitled to travel pay.

I only read this with reference to any possible misconstruc-tion of the word "given." The word "discharge" does not apply only to a discharge given on application, but is used as covering the whole ground where it is adverse and against the will of the soldier as well as where it is a favor to him.

This power has long existed, often been exercised, and rarely, if ever, abused. At all events, it certainly exists. The Congress has treated this power as entirely discretionary. It did so by chapter 860 of the Thirty-first Statutes at Large, page 708, which provides:

That when the Secretary of War, in the exercise of his discretion, has directed the discharge of any enlisted man of the regular or volunteer forces of the Army, and the orders or instructions directing such discharge stated that such enlisted men were entitled to travel pay, such order or direction shall be sufficient authority for the payment to the soldiers of the traveling allowances provided for by section 1290 of the Revised Statutes, etc.

This Congressional interpretation is confirmatory of the construction which the President and Secretary of War have placed upon it and for which we contend here, that it is an uncontrolled one. It is left uncontrolled in the faith that it will not be abused, but it is not so left that even an abuse of it affects the validity of its exercise, subject to the limitation to which I have alluded.

Mr. President, it will be observed that article 4 does not classify discharges. It covers the whole subject of discharges, honorable discharges, dishonorable discharges, discharges at expiration of term, discharges before expiration of term. It uses the word "discharge" in its generic sense.

A discharge without honor, which is neither an honorable nor a dishonorable discharge, but rather midway between the two, is the creature of regulations established and promulgated by the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President. classification which includes it has been in effect about fifteen years, with the acquiescence of Congress. I do not doubt its I do not remember to have heard it questioned.

I do not contend that the power of the President, directly or through the Secretary of War, to establish Army regulations is without limit. Such a proposition can not be maintained. The law upon the subject was declared by the Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Harlan, in the case of The United States v.

Symonds (120 U. S., 46), as follows:

Symonds (120 U. S., 46), as follows:

The authority of the Secretary to Issue orders, regulations, and instructions, with the approval of the President, in reference to matters connected with the aproval of the President, in reference to matters connected with the avail establishment is subject to the condition, necessarily implied, that they must be consistent with the statutes which have been enacted by Congress in reference to the Navy. He may, with the approval of the President, establish regulations in execution of, or supplementary to, but not in conflict with, the statutes defining his powers or conferring rights upon others. The contrary has never been held by this court. What we now say is entirely consistent with Gratiot v. United States (4 How., 80) and Ex parte Reed (100 U. S., 13), upon which the Government relies. Referring in the first case to certain Army regulations and in the other to certain Navy regulations, which had been approved by Congress, the court observed that they had the force of law. (See also Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 181.) In neither case, however, was it held that such regulations, when in conflict with the acts of Congress, could be upheld.

That these regulations are in execution of and sumplementary

That these regulations are in execution of and supplementary to, but not in conflict with article 4 or any other statute seems to be plain.

I have wished that the phrase "without honor" could be changed. I have tried to think of some expression which would improve it. It is difficult to find one. Perhaps it can be done. This form of discharge evidently grew out of the Walla Walla affair, which occurred in 1891 and was in many of its features much like the Brownsville affair. Hunt, a gambler, shot and mortally wounded at Walla Walla a soldier of the Fourth Cavalry, a white man. He was arrested by the civil authorities and incarcerated in the jail. There was evidently great want of discipline in the command. (The colonel commanding at the time was afterwards tried by court-martial for neglect of duty, found guilty, and punished, for not having adopted proper guards to prevent what occurred.) A party of enlisted men of the Fourth Cavalry, from thirty to fifty in number, on the evening of April 24, 1891, surrounded and demanded entrance to the jail, and by means of threats to blow it up induced the sheriff to unlock the door and permit them to enter. They took Hunt into the jail yard and shot him to death. They not only committed a murder, but invaded the peace and dignity and violated the laws of, a State in which the force for the time was located. The matter was investigated by a board of officers convened for the purpose.

It was impossible to identify the men. President Harrison then ordered a court of inquiry consisting of three very distinguished and experienced officers of the Army, each one of whom was a model soldier, to investigate and report upon the transaction—Brig. Gen. A. V. Kautz, Col. W. P. Carlin, a general during the war, and Col. Thomas M. Anderson, afterwards a general. With all their investigation they could not identify the men, and they knew how to investigate, and they understood the honor of the Army and knew what was essential to discipline and what is due from the soldier to the law.

They recommended in their report, among other things, as

That in consideration of the fact that the enlisted men of the garrison of Fort Walla Walla have withheld and neglected to give information which would lead to the identification of the soldiers implicated in the killing of A. J. Hunt, the court further recommends that a reasonable time be given to the officers and enlisted men of the four troops of the Fourth Cavalry at Fort Walla Walla, Wash. (A, C, D, and H), to surrender to the civil authorities for trial all the enlisted men guilty of the crime attempted on the night of April 23, 1891, and actually committed on the night of April 24, 1891; and if upon the expiration of such period the guilty parties aforesaid shall not have been delivered up for trial, that the four troops of the Fourth Cavalry named be, in such manner as may be for the best interests of the service, disbanded.

The Judge-Advocate-General advised that the recommendation to disband the companies or troops could not as matter of law be executed; that the Congress had provided that each regiment of cavalry should consist of a fixed number of companies, each company of a specified number of noncommissioned officers and privates. He advised that the President possessed authority to discharge all the men of the companies, enlisting others in their places, but that the discharge would be in law honorable as to the innocent and guilty alike; that the guilty could recalist; that such a discharge would be a premium on crime. served, moreover, as to the demeanor of the members of the command, as follows:

As to the demeanor of the enlisted force at Walla Walla, the comments of the court are fully borne out by the testimony in the record, It is also understood that these men had been similarly reluctant and secretive in their attitude toward the prosecuting officers, grand jury, etc., in the civil proceedings. This standing mute is evidently the result in part of a consciousness of guilt and in part of a false esprit de corps. The guilt of those who took part in the killing of April 24 is aggravated by the fact that Miller was living at the time, and their crime was clearly murder. The reticence of the rest—those who were cognizant of the violence committed, though not present—places them in a position equivalent or analogous to that of accessories after the fact. Their offenses, therefore, were of the gravest character.

I do not stop to discuss the question whether an officer or an enlisted man who knows of the commission of a crime against the laws of a State by an enlisted man and withholds that knowledge is punishable before a court-martial. I think he is. It is not so written, but it is probably to be considered conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline.

But, Mr. President, whether punishable by court-martial or not, it is inherent in the contract of enlistment. It is essential to honest and faithful service. It is the duty of a soldier to maintain the honor of the corps. Self-respect requires a soldier to do it; loyalty to his organization and commander requires a soldier to do it; allegiance to and respect for law and order and good citizenship, all of which enter into it, require a soldier to do it.

The situation is not at all to be compared with the pranks of college students and the college code of honor, which precludes one student from "telling on" others. Such pranks are almost always purely mischievous, sometimes annoying, but rarely ever harmful or brutal. They are generally pardoned by the public because of the known tendency of young men banded together to make a noise and "have a time," and the refusal of one participant to betray another is generally commended, not reprobated. But what, would be said of the conduct of a student who knew that one of his fellows had made a violent assault upon a girl, or had knocked down and robbed a roommate, or had done some other mean, cowardly, wicked thing and should conceal it?

The distinction between the two, Mr. President, is as broad as the sea. In one there is a sort of honor, a spirit of comrade-ship that hurts nobody, that is born in manly boys. In the other there is not a sense of honor; there is not the sense of pride which should lead a right-thinking man to feel "I am dishonored by this occurrence; my class and the college are degraded by it; we must have him out from among us or our standard among ourselves is lowered and degraded, and by ourselves.

on the other. That such an one was a necessity was clearly developed. So to meet such a case they adopted this regula-tion for the discharge without honor; and I venture to say, Mr. President, if the regulation had been in existence at that time and those four companies as individuals had been discharged without honor, the people of the United States would, without distinction of color, have applauded it as a proper exercise and a necessary exercise of discipline in the Army. I believe it.

Paragraph 148, upon the subject, is as follows:

Blank forms for discharge and final statements will be furnished by The Military Secretary of the Army, and will be retained in the personal custody of company commanders. Those for discharge will be of three classes: For honorable discharge, for dishonorable discharge, and for discharge without honor. They will be used as follows:

1. The blank for honorable discharge when the soldier's service has been honest and faithful, in which case he would be entitled to character at least "good."

2. The blank for discharge without honor when a soldier is discharged in the soldier of the soldier is discharged.

charged:

(a) Without trial, on account of fraudulent enlistment.

(b) Without trial, on account of having become disqualified for service, physically or in character, through his own misconduct.

(c) On account of imprisonment under sentence of a civil court.

(d) Where the service has not been honest and faithful; that is, where the service does not warrant his reculistment.

(c) When discharge without honor is specially ordered by the Secretary of Wer for any other reason.

3. The blank for dishonorable discharge, for dishonorable discharge by sentence of a court-martial or military commission.

That latter (e) leaves the discretion with the Secretary of War, recognized by the statute to which I called attention a little time ago, just as the statutes left it, without limit.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] argues—and argues, of ourse, with sincerity—that the President violated the law in discharging these soldiers without honor without first giving them thirty days' notice each, if possible, in accordance with paragraph 146, and an opportunity for investigation and determination by a board as to the character which should be given the discharge.

The Senator found in that evidence of great concern-he emphasized, I expect, that word a little-for the interest of the enlisted man by Congress. That regulation is not an act of Congress. It did not originate in Congress, as I recollect it, but was entirely the action of the President. Perhaps it was authorized. I have not examined the statutes to ascertain.

Mr. FORAKER. The regulations made by the President are authorized by act of Congress, and when the President and Secretary of War make new regulations and Congress ac-quiesces, the courts have held that that is the approval of Con-

Mr. SPOONER. I know that.
Mr. FORAKER. So that it is just as I stated, and I was careful to say that these regulations

Mr. SPOONER. But they were not enacted by Congress in the first place.

Mr. FORAKER. No; they were enacted by Congress only in the sense that the President and the Secretary of War had prescribed these regulations by authority of Congress.

Mr. SPOONER. Then what I said, that this concern for the enlisted man, this safeguarding of the enlisted man from injustice by a company commander, originated in the War Department, the executive department of the Government, and not in Congress is accurate. I am not prepared to believe that the Congress, which is not brought into very close connection with the Army in its personnel, as a rule, has more care for or interest in the good of the enlisted men of the Army than the officers who command them-than the President and the Secretary of War.

Upon what possible theory is it that the Senator from Ohio or any Senator can contend that paragraph 146 applies to the discharge of these enlisted men or that it is violated by the discharge of these enlisted men? Mr. President, the President is not above the law, and if Congress enacted these regulations he must be bound by them; but so long as they are regulations in force only because he made them, and Congress has not acted upon them, he is above them, for he can change them either as to individual cases or generally, provided only he does not violate an act of Congre

When a soldier is entitled to discharge, not by favor of any one, but by virtue of his contract, he is entitled to have his true character as a soldier placed upon that discharge. It is important to him, very important to him, because it not only affects its value to him as a soldier and a man, something to be proud of or not, but it affects his right to reenlist, and it was a wise thing and a just thing for the President, through the Secretary of War. not to leave this matter of fixing the character of a soldier, when At that time there was no regulation which enabled the Government to discharge in the interest of the service the guilty and the innocent without honoring the guilty as well as the innocent on the one hand or dishonoring the guilty and the innocent each man by name, but to know each man through and through. It is a close relation, and it often happens that officers have more or less friction with the private soldier and the commissioned officer. I know I found it so myself, My company commander had friction with me and I had friction with some men of my company; but I hope that if a man had been a good soldier, if his average had been good, I could not have done him an injustice or have permitted my judgment in fixing his character as a soldier to be governed or affected by my prejudice. I may be mistaken. There is a danger of it.

So it is provided by paragraph 146 that the character given on a discharge will be signed by the company or detachment commander, and great care will be taken that no injustice is done the soldier; that honest and faithful service shall entitle the soldier to character at least "good;" that where the com-pany commander deems the service not honest and faithful he shall, if practicable, so notify the soldier at least thirty days prior to discharge. He shall notify at the same time the commanding officer, who is in every case to convene a board of three, if practicable, to determine whether the service has been honest and faithful, before which board the soldier shall have a hear-If the company commander is the commanding officer he is obliged to report the facts to the next higher commander, who will convene the board. The finding of the board, when approved by the convening officer, is final. A discharge without honor can be given only on the approved finding of such board That is just, and therefore right.

But, Mr. President, with all deference to the Senator from Ohio-and no one likes him better or more admires him-I can not see any foundation whatever for connecting this paragraph and the proceedings under it with the discharge of the soldiers of this battalion, or with any discharge under the last clause of article 4, by the President, the Secretary of War, etc.

In the first place, Mr. President, no company commander; no regimental field officer unless he is commander of a department, can give an enlisted man a discharge at all before his term of enlistment has expired. That will not be disputed. The power to discharge can not be more explicit.

No enlisted man, duly sworn, shall be discharged from the service without a discharge in writing, signed by a field officer of the regiment to which he belongs, or by the commanding officer when no field officer is present.

If there is a field officer, and a man is entitled to his discharge, it is to be signed by a field officer or by the immediate commanding officer only when no field officer is present.

Then, what follows? An absolute prohibition of the discharge of any man from the service before the expiration of the term of enlistment except by the President, by the Secretary of War, by a department commander, or by general court-martial.

Analyzing the clause a little, Mr. President, how is it possible that the Senator from Ohio can be right in connecting paragraph 146 with a discharge under the last clause of article 4 of enlisted men prior to the expiration of their term of enlist-ment? The character of a discharge by court-martial is irrecocably fixed by the court itself. Certainly the Senator from Ohio can not successfully contend that where a man is sentenced to dishonorable discharge, or to discharge without honor, by a court-martial, before he shall be given such a discharge the character is to be fixed by his company commander or by a board of officers, under the provisions of paragraph 146. That, of course, is inconceivable.

The power of the President, the Secretary of War, and the commanding officer of a department to discharge with honor or without honor involves a power equally with the court-martial to fix the character of the soldier, except that only the court-martial can dishonorably discharge.

The term "without honor" fixes the character. How remarkable it would be to hold that where the President of the United States, in the exercise of his statutory authority, discharges a soldier, in his discretion, without honor, a company commander is to try again the question of character, notify the soldier that "without honor" will be put on his discharge, and, upon the demand of the soldier, a board of officers convened and to determine whether the President was right in the character which he fixed for the discharge! Congress made article 4, the latter clause, applying to discharges before expiration of term, being without limit as to number or reasons. The Secretary of War, with the approval of the President, made the regulations, including paragraph 146. It is not possible, aside from other reasons, to suppose they intended to restrict themselves in a power given by Congress, or make their exercise of it subject to the approval of a captain or lieutenant commanding a company, or a board of regimental officers. It is manifest that paragraph 146 applies to discharges at expiration of term of enlistment.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SPOONER Yes.

Mr. MALLORY. Paragraph 146 does not require that the soldier shall make the demand.

Mr. SPOONER. I know it. Mr. MALLORY. The Senator, then, evidently misapprehended what he was saying a while ago.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator is right. Mr. MALLORY. It does not so require. I ha I have it here in my It expressly makes it obligatory upon the officer to notify the soldier, without any request from the soldier at all.

Mr. SPOONER. I think that is right, and it ought to be so. If I said otherwise, it was inaccurate. Just consider that a moment, Mr. President. The President, the Secretary of War, the department commander, a court-martial, and no one else, may discharge a man before the expiration of his term of enlistment. The President makes these regulations. The President, in the exercise of that power, orders the discharge of a man from the service "without honor." What a situation would be necessarily involved if the contention of the Senator from Ohio is correct!

It has always been, so far as I know the rule, that where an enfisted man or an officer has been dishonorably discharged from the service by sentence of a court-martial, there is put on the discharge the character fixed by the court-martial, and a reference is made in the discharge to the sentence of the court-martial. So, where the President or the Secretary of War or the department commander orders the discharge of a man "without honor," while the proper subordinate official signs the discharge, no function is left to him to determine the character of the discharge. They are commanded by a lawful authority at the head of the Army to discharge "without honor." They enter on the discharge papers the number and date, perhaps, of the spe-Any other theory would involve an absolutely grocial order. tesque situation.

Higher tribunals sit in judgment upon the decisions of lower tribunals, but a lower tribunal does not sit in judgment on appeal from a higher tribunal. When the President or the Secretary of War or a department commander or a court-martial has determined upon the discharge and its character that is the end of it. Subordinates are but to obey.

THE DISCHARGES WERE NOT "PUNISHMENT."

Now, Mr. President, I come to another branch of this matter. The Senator from Ohio, with great ability and ingenuity, contends that the President has usurped a function. Not denying his power to discharge particularly, he contends he had no right to exercise this power as to these men. Why not? The Senator says that the President has no power to punish. agree to that. He has not. The President can not make a charge against an enlisted man, try him before himself, convict him himself, sentence him himself, and execute the sentence himself. If the President has inflicted—not from the standpoint of the newspapers or words in the orders or the instructions or the messages—punishment in the legal sense, and the word is here used in its legal sense, for it goes to his power-his action is void. Has he done this?

The Senator says these men have been charged with a crime. Every man charged with a crime, in the Army or out of it, is entitled to his day in court. He is entitled to know, Mr. President, by specifications adequate in clearness, setting forth the offense with certainty, if in civil life, by a presentment of a grand jury, or information in some States; if in military life for a military offense, by charges and specifications, to which he may plead "guilty" or "not guilty." No witness can be examined against him without his consent, except in his presence. He is entitled to cross-examine witnesses through his counsel. If he has not counsel, a civil court assigns counsel to help him, and it is the sworn duty of the lawyer, as an officer of the court, to do it. If it be a military court, a military officer is assigned to defend him if he can not employ counsel. possible disagreement between the Senator from Ohio and myself as to that. He is entitled to be heard in argument on the evidence and on the law.

But where is there any charge against these men in a sense which warrants the Senator from Ohio or anybody else in impeaching the validity of the President's action? A charge, Mr. President, in a newspaper is not a charge in the sense of the law. A charge in a message is not a charge upon which a law-yer can logically base the argument, involving a question of power or jurisdiction under the contention which has been urged here.

I want all the circumstances and facts of this transaction investigated. But when the investigation is had, these men will not be having a day in court, except in the phraseology of the

They will not be having a day in court as lawyers understand the term and as the law books use it. Nor, Mr. President, going to the question of power, is there any charge made against any one of these men. I am speaking from the legal standpoint, not from the oratorical standpoint.

Discharge by way of punishment? No. The Supreme Court has really settled that question, as I will try to show. I am sure that no thought or purpose or assumption of power to convict and punish any of these men can be imputed to the President. On the contrary, his message has not excluded the belief, nor has anything uttered, as I remember, by the Secretary of War, that some of these men are innocent even of knowledge, do not myself believe that knowledge of this scheme was widely distributed. These men, if they could be identified as participating in that assault, would be turned over to the civil authorities for trial and punishment, and if they were convicted by the civil authorities it would be impossible afterwards to do anything with them, I expect, but to bury them. If they were convicted of murder, they would be punished for murder. Why were they not turned over, Mr. President, to the civil authorities? For the same reason that they could not be charged and tried before a court-martial.

The same difficulty which confronted the grand jury and confronts it to-day confronted the President—the impossibility up to this hour of identifying the perpetrators of this crime. Thirteen of these men were arrested and were held under military guard pending the consideration by the grand jury of the case after the warrants had been served upon them, or rather upon their officers for them. They continued after service of the warrants to be held by the military authorities. Why were they Why were they held? They were held, after consultation and with the concurrence of the civil authorities, because of the tremendous excitement there, not unnaturally, following such a transaction, and the danger that the people might in the passion of the hour forget the duty of the citizen and take the law into their own hands and punish without trial, which is a crime not only against the victim, even if he be guilty, but a crime, Mr. President, against society, a crime against the State, against the county, against good order and civilization-a crime which, alas, in the heat and passion and weakness of our common humanity is com-mitted now and then in communities North and South, East and West, but which is always regretted by thoughful men and good citizens everywhere and allowed to pass in silence—never vaunted and glorified.

Mr. President, no man can justly doubt that it was with keen regret and reluctance that the President reached the conclusion that men from this battalion, clad in the uniform of the United States Army, belonging to a military organization alongside of which he and soldiers of another color, the men of his own regiment, had served in Cuba, sharing with him, black as they are. and with his white companions equally the glory and pride and fame of gallant service there.

Did the grand jury fail to find an indictment because they doubted that the soldiers committed this crime? No. No one who reads this record can say that. Why were none of these men indicted? Because none could be identified as guilty. And no man's behavior could be better in the midst of great popular excitement than the conduct of Judge Welch, the presiding judge of that court. He found the people there in the tensest excitement. He found the women shuddering and the children crying. He had no doubt that the soldiers committed this crime. He said to the grand jury:

I know, gentlemen of the jury, that it takes a long time for blood to cool when it is raised to fever heat by such terrible outrages as your people have had to endure, but in this second test of their high moral courage you, as their special representatives, must be calm, wise, and just, and for the sake of the good name of your community you can not and must not indulge in a single thought of vengeance. You must present for trial before the courts of our State only those against whom evidence is adduced sufficiently pertinent and strong to warrant conviction by a trial jury, and going beyond mere suspicion or even strong probability.

No new Mr. Description.

No, no, Mr. President; and that is true of the military court as it is of the civil court. Proof that an offense has been committed is the first and fundamental step. Proof connecting the defendant accused, by evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, with the offense is the next, and without either there can be no honest conviction. These men therefore were discharged from arrest, the warrants revoked, upon the failure of the grand jury to find an indictment, and they failed to find an indictment because the men could not be identified. That failure is an insuperable bar to conviction and punishment equally in civil and

It is not strange if these men did this thing that they were not identified. It is not very easy to identify colored men in the night. But the troops had been there but a couple of Whatever movements were made there were made with great celerity, by whomever they were made. In the darkness and with the surprise and fright, the wonder is only that anyone is able to testify even to the general appearance of those who perpetrated it.

Mr. President, I said something yesterday about the record of this regiment. Colored troops have been at Brownsville a number of times before this. General Corbin commanded colored troops at Brownsville, and other officers well known commanded colored troops at Brownsville, and before this there had been no trouble. I will not talk about the officers of that battalion, for I deem it improper. They are awaiting trial, and it would not be decent, far away as they are and in the position in which they are placed, to comment here upon them. They are entitled to their day in court. There is no difficulty about that, for they are known and charges have been preferred against them.

Now, what was the President to do? Transfer those men to some other southern community? Why take them away from Brownsville and quarter them somewhere else among the people? Why take them from the South and send them to some village in the North? What community would be willing to have stationed in its midst a battalion of troops a portion of whom, undiscovered and undiscoverable, had made a midnight attack upon a city with Government weapons and ammunition. shooting indiscriminately, killing one man, wounding the lleutenant of police, necessitating amputation of his arm, shooting at a woman as she stood near her window, shooting into lighted houses, where they might kill the mother and her babe as she lay sleeping, caring nothing for childhood or sex or old age? What should the Commander in Chief do? Nothing but transfer the honest and faithful men of the battalion, with the murderers of that battalion, to some other community, emboldened by successful concealment of identity to do the same and worse the next time somewhere else, or discharge them all without honor from the service.

The President's duty in such a case was not to the battalion or for the good of the Army alone, but he ewed something to the communities of the United States, among whom some where this battalion would be stationed. Even Mingo Sanders, with twenty-six years of service, with a character "good" and "very good" and "excellent," a hero in many frontier battles, a hero in Cuba, a hero in the Philippines, discharged without honor, is served with notice by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] that he must not go to the State of his birth lest he should be shot down as a possible perpetrator of or participant in this affair at Brownsville. What about the battalion as a whole and other communities and States? Mr. TILLMAN. Would you like to have him sent to Wisconsin?

Mr. SPOONER. So far as he is concerned, I would not have the slightest objection, for anything I know. But I will have something to say about that before I finish, and I ought to be

Mr. President, in order to fairly judge another and another's acts we must put ourselves in his place. It is easy enough, after the fact, to criticise. The methods might have been different. That was a matter, as I said, to be determined by the President. But given the correctness of his conclusion, what else could he have done in justice to the Twenty-fifth Infantry, in justice to the colored people, in justice to the honor of the Army, and in justice to the public interest than that which he Undoubtedly it is true that if the President or the officials could have identified the men who composed this platoon or squad they would have been turned over to the civil authorities for trial and punishment. If it were known that some of the men were parties to it-I mean parties to it in the mere matter of knowledge after the fact-it is true they probably could be sent before a court-martial and be tried under the sixty-second article. But it has been impossible to send these men or any of them upon any charge before a court-martial, for it has been impossible to identify any of them as guilty of any specific offense, and it does not follow that the President must be able to establish a charge under the Articles of War against a man to enable him to lawfully discharge him from the service without honor, if he thinks the good of the service requires it.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] said—I do not remember his precise language—that the President is estopped from raising this question or alleging it. He does not raise it. I raise it. And I am discussing this matter from my own standpoint, as I would discuss it in the Senate if the President were a Democrat or if he were my enemy. The Senator from Ohio said charges were preferred against thirteen of these men. That is true. Why was it done? I believe it was after the grand jury had met and found no bill of indictment. An officer down there was ordered to prefer charges against these thirteen men. Was it not after the grand jury had acted?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think so. Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is mistaken about that. The grand jury investigated this case some time after these charges were preferred.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will bear with me a moment

Mr. SPOONER. Yes. Mr. FORAKER. These men were arrested, I believe, on the 23d day of August, the day before the battalion left Brownsville.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. They were to have been left behind, according to the first understanding that was arrived at between the military officers and the civil authorities. Later a different arrangement was entered into, whereby the civil process was recalled, and the men were released from arrest. As soon as that was ascertained and reported to Washington, instructions were given to prefer charges under the sixty-second article of war.

Mr. SPOONER. That is immaterial—
Mr. FORAKER. I would not have interrupted the Senator from Wisconsin if he had not asked me the question.

SPOONER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I would have a right to be offended at what he thinks I meant.

Mr. FORAKER. I am not offended, but I do not want to be lectured in public for answering a question when the Senator propounded it to me.

Mr. SPOONER. What I meant to say was that it is imma-

Mr. FORAKER. That is different.
Mr. SPOONER. I would have said that, if the Senator from Ohio had permitted. It is immaterial for the purposes of what I want to say about that whether the preferring of these charges against these men was before or after the action of the grand jury. Anyone who reads the record here knows that these charges were not preferred against these men in order or with the expectation that they would be brought to trial on those charges. No court was instituted for that purpose. I think it was not expected that any court would be instituted for that purpose. The charges were made against these men for a legitimate purpose, not adverse to them, not by way of prejudgment of their guilt or innocence, not because the Gov-ernment had identified them directly or indirectly as guilty of participation in this transaction at Brownsville. They were the same thirteen men who had been charged and arrested by the civil authorities. The charges were preferred against them in order to put their officers in position lawfully to protect them against being taken by habeas corpus from the military custody, possibly to be lynched. Those charges, and the papers clearly enough show it

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SPOONER. I do. Mr. FORAKER. I dislike exceedingly to interrupt the Senator, but he is evidently under a misapprehension as to the point I made or else I fail to understand him now. What I said was that when I first spoke on this point I went to the trouble to cite authorities to show that the charges against these men were cognizable under the sixty-second article of war. When I spoke on the occasion to which the Senator refers, I said that after I had done that, I had ascertained by looking through Senate Document No. 165 that The Military Secretary, with the approval of the President and the Attorney-General, had taken the same view of it-

Mr. SPOONER. Very well. Mr. FORAKER. And they had directed charges to be filed under the sixty-second article of war. I said that for no other purpose, and gave no other purpose to it, than to show that if there was any ground upon which to make any such charge, it might be tried. I did not indicate that there was any evidence to sustain the charge.

Mr. SPOONER. I know that. I am glad the Senator has made that statement. I have never disputed, nor do I now, that a court-martial would have cognizance of a charge against these men under the sixty-second article, but what I say is that there has never been the slightest evidence under which any one of them could be sent before a court-martial under the sixty-second article of war.

Mr. FORAKER. That everybody agrees to.
Mr. SPOONER. Very well; let us see. It does not follow from that that there is not in this battalion a band of murderers, and it does not follow from that either that there are not men in the battalion who were cognizant and who are cognizant of the perpetrators of that outrage. But that is neither here nor there. I would have said anyway what I repeat, that these charges were ordered to be filed against these men in order to enable their officers to make adequate return to a writ of habeas corpus that they were held in the custody of the United States under charges, Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. For a question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I only want to ask a question.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I understand it, thirteen men were singled out, or whose names were put in the warrants, as probably the guilty ones. Some of them were on guard—

Now, Mr. President-As sentinels. Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. TILLMAN.

Mr. SPOONER. Next week will do just as well for the Senator to ask the question.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course-

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator asks a question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have got to explain what I mean. Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is sometimes very rapid of I wish he would ask the question. What is it?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will not interrupt the Senator if he will not permit me to ask it in my own way.

Mr. SPOONER. Ask it, but do not preface it with a speech.
Mr. TILLMAN. I am not going to preface it with a speech.
When I want to speak I generally do it, and I generally do it directly, so that nobody misunderstands me.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know about that. Mr. TILLMAN. You never have misunders You never have misunderstood me at least.

You-have misinterpreted me sometimes.

Mr. SPOONER. Out of charity I have brought myself to the conclusion sometimes that I had misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, with your permission, I will ask my question in my own way or I will sit down—whichever you want.

Mr. SPOONER. No; go on.
Mr. TILLMAN. I was saying that the men who were on guard and the sergeant in charge of the gun racks and who must have known, in the view of the grand jury and of the military officers, something about this transaction were among the thirteen who were arrested as suspected. I want to ask the Senator whether or not the men who were guilty of not keeping the guard and allowing the men to go out of the garrison and the men who were guilty of allowing the gun racks to be opened and the guns taken out, were not amenable to court-martial. and if it was not a military offense worthy of investigation?

Mr. SPOONER. Is that the question?
Mr. TILLMAN. I leave you to judge whether it is a question

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the affidavits of all the men having charge of the gun racks were that the gun racks were not opened until the call to arms; that the keys had been in their possession all of the time; that the racks had only been opened to allow the guns to be taken out for the guards and to be put back by the men whose tour of duty was ended. That is sworn to by the sergeants themselves, except as to one rack, that of Company C, which it was said the men at the time in their hurry for the arms broke open. I fail to dis-

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has not said anything about the crime or the omission to do their duty being an offense which was triable by court-martial. It is not a question of the affidavits which were offered. I think the Senator agrees with me that there have been a good many lies sworn to.
Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is not asking me any question.

A reply to it would be difficult or, if made, would not elucidate in any way the question which I am discussing.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator was making an assertion, though, and I wanted to answer it.

What assertion did I make?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. TILLMAN. You say these men, if I recall it, were not triable, that they had done nothing that would give any excuse for a court-martial.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say that.
Mr. TILLMAN. That was the meaning of your words, if I understood the language.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator does not understand my lan-I said the President believed that a part of the battalion perpetrated this offense, and that others knew it; that every one of them made an affidavit that he did not know it; that the President did not know who did it, and there was nothing for him to send to a court-martial; and that it did not follow, as it does not, that while the offenses, if the perpetrators could be identified, would be cognizable by a court-martial, that where the perpetrators could not be identified, the President, if he thought they were guilty, but could not prove it, might not discharge them legally without honor from the service of the United States. And that it what he did. There is no man who believes, Mr. President, that if there had been evidence in the possession of the President to enable him to make a case, against men as having been participants in this transaction he would not have done it. He would, I doubt not, as would any generous, manly man, have been delighted beyond the power of expression to be able by the identification of the guilty to identify the innocent. But from the reports made to him by officers who investigated it and by the commander of this battalion, Major Penrose, that he believed men of the battalion were guilty, and from all the moral evidence the President came to the conclusion that men of that battalion did it. But to this hour there is no evidence that I know of as to individual soldiers who did it.

Mr. President, when the commander of a company or a battalion reports that he believes his men or men from his command have committed an outrage which has shocked the whole country the President is entitled to base much upon it, for naturally the commander stands by his men-Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. SPOONER. No; not now. He stands by his men when he can. It is a part of the comradeship of the officer and men that he should. Moreover, no man could have a higher, intenser interest in the determination that his command was guiltless than Major Penrose, for he knew it would involve himself, as it has involved himself

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not discussing that part of it. That is not the point which I want to make.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. It depends on the nature of the question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will make it like a bullet.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, you shoot your bullet very slowly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I like to look in the Senator's eyes.

Mr. SPOONER. Go on.

Why did not the President, if he had so Mr. TILLMAN. much regard for this officer's recommendation, follow it in regard to employing detectives and enlisting them in the company and-

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—
Mr. TILLMAN. Try to get at the facts in that way?
Mr. SPOONER. I think the President of the United States will never require any defense against the assaults of the Senator from South Carolina. It has become a mania with the Senator from South Carolina. Mr. President, I have been surprised at the attitude of the Senator from South Carolina more than I ever was by the attitude of any other Senator. The Senator from South Carolina is so filled with animosity against the President of the United States and has so often taken occasion here to express it that I do not believe the people of this country regard his assaults as entirely disinterested.

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. SPOONER. No; not yet.

Mr. TILLMAN. Surely the Senator will let me come in?

When I get through. Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is that part of the speech through?

Mr. SPOONER. I am not through with that part of it. did ont intend to make this part of it, but the Senator invites me to it. The Senator "associated" himself with the Senator from The Senator began by charging these men, all of them, with being brutal, cowardly, treacherous murderers. That was Then the Senator expressed his conviction that this the first. outrage was perpetrated by men from this battalion. That is the second. This battalion, as a whole, he characterizes as murderers. Then the Senator attacks the President, and in harsh, bitter words, unreasoned and unjust, impeaches his motives and his justice. What about the justice of the Senator from South Carolina to the balance of these men who did not participate in this outrage?

The Senator based his attack upon the President upon his fundamental undying love for justice and liberty. The idea that the President of the United States, even in a case where it was impossible to identify the perpetrators of a cowardly and a wicked crime, should discharge them without a trial shocked the Senator's sense of liberty and justice.

How could he try them or send them to trial if he could not identify them? I never was so touched as I was by the wonderful attachment and loyalty of the Senator from South Carolina to that glorious and fundamental principle of liberty, that no man shall be judged except upon trial.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do not misquote me.
Mr. SPOONER. No; I put it mildly. I do not intend to misquote you. Quote yourself, if you please.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.
Mr. TILLMAN. I said it is the fundamental principle of English and American liberty that every man shall be considered innocent until he is proved guilty-

Mr. SPOONER. Proved guilty where? Mr. TILLMAN. In a court, of course. And that ten guilty had better escape than one innocent suffer. Does the Senator object to that?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the statement is accurate, generally speaking, but with what grace can the Senator, using that as a foundation, charge usurpation in this case and a violation of fundamental principles of liberty upon the President of the United States? Is not that principle applicable to a black man in the South as well as to the white man in the South or the white man in the North? The Senator, who says, "We shot them, we killed them, and we will do it again," on a former occasion-

Mr. TILLMAN. May I get in? Mr. SPOONER. What do you want to get in for? I want to finish. What is it?

Mr. TILLMAN. How much provocation will you give a man before you give him a chance to strike back a little?
Mr. SPOONER. Well, strike back; go on.

Mr. TILLMAN. On this proposition which you are discussing you first branch off on one phase of it. You had better sit down a little, if you please.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I do not intend to yield for a speech. The Senator can answer me later. If he wants to ask me a question, he is welcome.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is that all? Mr. SPOONER. That is all.

Now, Mr. President, I would do the Senator from South Carolina no injustice.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Wisconsin, however, turns himself directly to me, mentions me by name, speaks of things I have said and of my motives, and all that sort of thing, and then says I may answer him hereafter, but he will only let me in now for a question.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to finish what I want to say. What is the question?

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not start to ask a question.

Mr. SPOONER. Start to ask it.

Mr TILLMAN. I said I did not start to ask a question.
Mr. SPOONER. I decline to allow the Senator to make a speech. I am anxious to get through.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President, I believe in law. believe that wherever a man perpetrates a crime, or a crime is committed and the perpetrator or suspected perpetrator can be identified, the law should seize him. I believe he is entitled to a trial before sentence. I believe he is entitled to a day in

I am opposed, Mr. President, to any man making himself judge, juror, and executioner. I look upon it as shocking beyond expression in civilized communities, Mr. President, for the populace to seize a human being, charge him with crime, drag him to a tree protesting his innocence, and hang him or burn him at the stake. "In the corrupted currents of this world" it sometimes happens. All just men deplore it. No man ought to encourage it. It is a crime against civilization to encourage it.

I have looked with peculiar honor and pride upon the brave, continued, efforts of southern governors to conserve the law, to maintain peace, to make that a real shield which the law in every civilized community is intended to throw around a man accused of crime. I have admired Governor Vardaman for it; I have admired the governors of other States in the South for it; I admire the governor anywhere who has done his uttermost to prevent lynching and to punish lynching.

And, Mr. President, I have been shocked more than once. was shocked the other day here by the statement of the Senator was snocked the other day here by the statement of the Senator from South Carolina justifying it and supporting its continuance. If there is one man under the sky who ought not to do it it is a maker of the laws which govern the people.

Mr. President, this is not an attack nor is it intended to be upon the Senator from South Carolina. It is a plea for good government, orderly government, real liberty—not the liberty of one man, but the liberty of all. What is liberty? It is not license. Liberty was once well defined to be "freedom to do that which the law permits." That is what liberty is. I say again that any man here or elsewhere who encourages lynching, murder, lawlessness, will have much to answer for, and the higher his position and the weightier his influence the more he will have to answer for.

Mr. President, what I started to say when led off into this is that no man can come with very good grace to berate and vitu-peratively impeach the President of the United States for having discharged men without honor from the Army without trial because he could not identify the guilty and single them out from the innocent, who comes to that accusation from a lynch-ing bee or from justifying one. There ought not to be one law for the white man and another law for the black man. The law, Mr. President, is for all. Every man in the land is entitled to its protection, and every man in the land, if he violates it, should feel its weight and punishment after trial and conviction. They have no more right in one State than in another to condemn men and execute them without trial whatever the offense may be. Mr. President, I am sorry to have been led off into I come back to the point I was making.

The Senator from Ohio calls this discharge without honor a punishment. Is it a punishment? Mr. President, to my mind, in the legal sense, it is not possible for anyone accurately to characterize it as a punishment. As to the men who are guilty, if any are guilty—and the President was satisfied of -it certainly is not a punishment; as to the men who are innocent it is not a punishment, although it is a great hardship. Punishment by order is not permitted in the Army of the United States. (Digest Opinions Judge-Advocate-General, par. 2322, and note, p. 654.) It only follows upon the judgment of a court-martial. Used in any other than its legal sense it has no place in this debate in support of a claim that the President has usurped the function of a court-martial and punished without authority. The statute provides that an enlisted man discharged, except by way of punishment, shall be entitled to travel pay. I suppose the word punishment in that clause means just what it means in the Articles of War, and means just what it means to the lawyer anywhere and everywhere. This was not punishment.

In United States v. Kingsley (138 U. S., 90) the Supreme Court had occasion to define the word punishment, in section 1290, Revised Statutes, which provides that-when a soldier is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment, he shall be allowed transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service, etc.

Kingsley was a marine and was discharged for unfitness for the service and general bad character. He sued for retained pay under section 1831, Revised Statutes, and for transportation and subsistence.

It was held by the Court of Claims that "to deny his right to retained pay a forfeiture must have been considered and declared by a court-martial or other military authority having jurisdiction in the premises," and judgment was given him for his retained pay and for his transportation and subsistence. On appeal the Supreme Court reversed the judgment, with direction to the lower court to set aside the judgment and enter a new one for the transportation and subsistence, saying:

(1) Claimant's right to retained pay depends upon Revised Statutes, section 1281, which reads as follows: "To the rates of pay stated in the preceding section $\frac{1}{2}$ per month shall be added for the third year of enlistment, $\frac{1}{2}$ more per month for the fourth year, and $\frac{1}{2}$ more per month for the fifth year, making in all, $\frac{3}{2}$ increase per month for the last year of the first enlistment of each enlisted man named in said section. But this increase shall be considered as retained pay, and shall not be paid to the soldier until his discharge from the service, and shall be forfeited unless he serves honestly and faithfully to the date of discharge."

That is the statute.

That is the statute.

To entitle the soldier to this retained pay it is therefore necessary to show, first, his discharge from the service; second, an honest and faithful service to the date of discharge. It was held by the Court of Claims, however, that to deny his right to retained pay a forfeiture must have been considered and declared by a court-martial or other military authority having jurisdiction in the premises, and that the question of honest and faithful service, required by the section, was not one that could be tried in a collateral proceeding. We are nuable to concur in this opinion. By his enlistment the soldier contracts for honest and faithful service, and the rendition of such service is a condition precedent to his right to recover his retained pay. The fact that he has not rendered such service may be shown as well by his military record as by the judgment of a court-martial. * * *

The court cites United States v. Landers (92 U. S., 77), and continues:

Different considerations apply to his claim for transportation and subsistence from the place of discharge to the place of enlistment. The right to this depends upon section 1290—

"When a soldier is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense"-

These words are italicized by the court-

These words are Italicized by the court—

"he shall be allowed transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service."

We think this statute contemplates a discharge as a punishment inflicted by the judgment of a court-martial or other military authority for a specific offense, and not such a discharge as was issued in this case, for unfitness for service and general bad character. While this may justify the proper authorities in ordering the discharge of the soldier as a worthless member of the service, we can not consider such a discharge as "a punishment for an offense" within the meaning of the statute. The question whether such punishment must necessarily be awarded by the judgment of a court-martial is not presented by this record, and we express no opinion upon the point.

Mr. Presidant expray right that would not follow a discharge

Mr. President, every right that would not follow a discharge by way of punishment did follow these discharges without honor. The men forfeited nothing except the right to reenlist. Upon what theory it can be called a "punishment" I am unable

I do not intend, Mr. President, to go at any length or thoroughness into the mass of reports, affidavits, statements, and documents bearing upon the question of fact. I may incorporate some extracts in my remarks, if permitted to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, leave is granted.

Mr. SPOONER. I have read attentively everything which has been sent to the Senate upon the subject. That an attack was made at midnight upon the city of Brownsville by armed men, resulting in death, wounds, and terrorism, can not be dismen, resulting in death, woulds, and terrorish, can let be the puted. I have been unable to escape the conviction that it was perpetrated by soldiers of the battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, not simply from the statements of those who swear that they saw the men, that they were in uniform and colored, and somewhat under command, but from moral evidences inherent in the situation. The suggestion that this shooting was done by citizens of Brownsville in order to bring obloquy upon the battalion, which would lead to its removal from that post, has, for a variety of reasons, seemed to me not only untenable, but grotesque.

The discussion of the whole subject by the President and by the Secretary of War seems to me unanswerable. I incline. strongly to the opinion that the heart of the trouble was in Company C. With one exception, as I remember it, the soldiers who had trouble with citizens belonged to Company C.

There seems to me to be a lie out on this record as to the gun racks of Company C. The affidavit—and I read it that it may have attention hereafter—of D. W. O'Browner, of Company C, on the 14th day of August, the day after this affair occurred, is as follows:

occurred, is as follows:

I was in charge of the company quarters of Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, on the 13th and 14th of August, 1906. I locked the arm racks in the company quarters between 10 and 11 o'clock a. m. August 13. There were 53 in the racks, which, with the 4 rifles in the hands of the members of the guard, made up to the total number issued to the men of Company C: that is, 57 rifles in all. The keys of the arm racks were constantly in my possession. The arm racks were not opened until about 12.15 a. m., August 13, 1906, for any reason except that about 2.30 o'clock p. m., August 13, 1906, one rack was opened for a moment to allow the supernumerary of the guard to get his rifle in order to take the place of a member of the guard who was taken sick, and whose rifle was at the same time placed in this arm rack.

About 12.15 a. m., August 14, 1906, I was awakened by a corporal of the company, who told me that shooting had been going on and that call to arms had been sounded, and to get up and open the arm racks. I went down to the first sergeant and asked him what I should do, whether I should open the arm racks, and he said, "Wait for orders." Corporal Madison, whom I met as I was returning to the squad room, told me orders of the commanding officer were to open the arm racks. I then opened three racks, the fourth having been broken open by the men trying to get their rifles from the racks to fall in when call to arms sounded.

It seems a little strange to me that the men of Company C

It seems a little strange to me that the men of Company C alone could not icait, as the members of the other companies had waited, for the gun racks to be unlocked, especially in view of the testimony of O'Browner that he unlocked three of the four. Then comes the affidavit of First Sergeant Harley, of Company He says:

C. He says:

He met noncommissioned officer Sergeant Browner in charge of quarters; Sergeant Browner asked him, "Shall I open the racks?" to which he replied, "Wait for orders." He then met Corporal Washington, who informed him that the call to arms had been sounded. He then instructed Corporal Washington to inform Sergeant Browner to let the men have their guns and get downstairs as quickly as possible. Some of the men were already downstairs without their guns, and he sent them back for their rifles. Major Penrose asked why they did not have their guns, and a member of the company replied that they could not get their guns from the racks, as they could not get in them. Major Penrose ordered them to get their guns if they had to break open the gun, racks. Sergeant Browner opened as fast as he could the racks in the dark, but the men broke open one rack. He reported to Lieutenant Grier, who took charge of the company at once.

It will be noticed that the affidavit of O'Browner, made August

It will be noticed that the affidavit of O'Browner, made August 14, and the affidavit of Harley, made November 24, are not in O'Browner swears that he asked Harley whether he should open the racks, and that Harley said, "Wait for orders." Harley says that O'Browner asked him, "Shall I open the racks?" to which he replied, "Wait for orders." Here they Harley says he instructed Corporal Washington to inagree. form Sergeant O'Browner to let the men have their guns and get downstairs as quickly as possible. O'Browner swears that Corporal Madison, whom he met as he was returning to the squad room, told him the orders of the commanding officer were to open the arm racks.

Harley further swears that as some of the men were already downstairs without guns, he sent them back for their rifles. When Major Penrose asked why they did not have their guns and a member of the company replied that they could not get their guns from the racks, Major Penrose ordered them to get their guns if they had to break open the racks.

It will be noticed in the affidavit of O'Browner, August 14, he not only does not claim to have heard any such orders from Major Penrose, but that he was on his way back to the squad room and was informed of the orders to open the racks by Corporal Madison.

On the 24th of November Sergeant O'Browner made for the Constitutional League an affidavit, as follows:

Affidavit S .- W. O'Browner, Company C. Aroused by firing.

Affidatif S.—W. O'Browner, Company C. Aroused by firing.

Terrory of Oklahoma, County of Canadian, ss:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, duly authorized to administer oaths in and for the county and Territory aforesaid, one Sergt. Darby W. O'Browner, of Company C. Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, who deposes and says that he has been in the United States Army for a period of fourteen years—in Cuba. El Caney, and Santiago, in the Philippines April, 1900, to August 1, 1902.

That on August 13 he was garrisoned at Fort Brown and was detailed in charge of quarters Company C; between 12 and 12.20 he was aroused by firing, which sounded like it was a distance over the brick wall in town, and that he rushed downstairs to find his first sergeant, and received orders as to opening up the gun racks. He found Sergeant Harley, who said, "Wait for orders." While standing there he heard Major Penrose say: "Open those gun racks and fall in line promptly, and if you can not find noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters break them open and fall in line promptly." He rushed upstairs and one that he could not get open was broken open and he found all of the guns intact. The men ran promptly and fell in line, and the roll was called and the men were all present and accounted for. He lighted a lantern and found all of the gun racks intact except the one broken open. He remained in charge of quarters.

Affiant further deposes and says that to his best knowledge no fire-arms were gone or used by any members of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry at Fort Brown prior to call at arms as stated. He means by members of Company C.

Darby W. O'Browner.

DARBY W. O'BROWNER

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 24th day of November, 1906. E. T. Barbour, Notary Public.

My commission expires July 20, 1907. It will be observed that he failed to remember the statement made under oath on the 14th of August, that Corporal Madison communicated to him the order to open the gun racks as he was returning to the squad room, and that he does not mention Corporal Madison at all. He did not pretend in his affidavit the day after the occurrence that he had seen or heard from Major Penrose, but in the foregoing affidavit he makes oath that at the time Sergeant Harley told him to wait for orders, and while he was standing there, he heard Major Penrose say: "Open those gun racks and fall in line promptly, and if you can not find the noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters break them open. This is all new and in conflict with his former affidavit. Without taking time to further analyze it, the difference between the two affidavits is significant and sinister.

In Major Penrose's report from Fort Brown, August 15, 1906. page 68, Senate Document No. 135, second session Fifty-ninth

Congress, he says:

I have the affidavits from three noncommissioned officers who were in charge of quarters on the day and night, and they swear positively the rifles were verified and the racks locked after drill (practice march of Companies B and D, drill of Company C), and the old guard returned to the quarters; that they never left the quarters, and that the keys to the locks of the racks were never out of their possession, and that the racks were not opened until call to arms sounded and were then opened by them by them

When in connection with the discrepancy in these affidavits one turns to the speech of the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] there is an exhibit under oath which, if true, throws a flood of light upon this matter.

Mr. CARMACK.

What page?
Page 28. It is the statement of W. H. Mr. SPOONER. I have endeavored to ascertain who W. H. Sharpe is. He was the post blacksmith. He is not a black man; he is a white man, who went with this company from Fort Brown to their present post-Fort Reno, I think, or whatever their destination was-and is still in service there. He is an employee of the Quartermaster's Department, and he makes this statement under oath:

I live at Fort Brown. I am the post blacksmith. On the 14th of August, the day after the riot, I received verbal orders from the post quartermaster, Lieutenant Greer, through Q. M. Sergt. Roland Allsby, to repair four gun racks, which were brought to my shop. These racks belonged to Company C, as I heard, but I do not know so from my own personal knowledge. The staples which held the locks had been pulled out, and I replaced them. The piece of iron on which the staples are riveted is 2 inches wide and one-fourth of an inch in thickness; It would require considerable force to break the staples out of the

But he swears that on the four gun racks they were broken out of the iron-

The upper part of the racks, which hold the pistols, showed marks (gashes) as if made with an ax, but the locks had not been disturbed.

When the time comes that phase of this matter-

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I should like to make an inouiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. CARMACK. Is not that which the Senator just read a sworn statement in the testimony before the grand jury?

Mr. SPOONER. It is a sworn statement, and a very significant thing, Mr. President, which will call for investigation.

Mr. President, I am as anxious as any man can be that, if it possible to do it in the proper exercise of legislative power, it shall be determined whether the men from this company and battalion did it. I hope with all my heart it will be possible to identify those who did do it, but I believe that the President has acted entirely within his power and in a manner which he believes, and which I believe, to have been in the interest of the people, for the good of the Army, and for the good of the race to which the discharged soldiers belong.

Now, Mr. President, a word and I shall have finished, apologizing to the Senate for taking so much time and for having allowed myself to discuss some matters not strictly involved. realize as well as any man in the North the complicated and troublesome and, perhaps, in some ways dangerous situation as to both races in the South. I am not able to say that in dealing with the Southern States at the end of the war measures were not adopted which, from the standpoint of to-day, might not better, in some aspects of it, have been pretermitted. In the situation as it presented itself to the Congress of northern men, fresh from the struggle to suppress insurrection against the Government in a war to preserve the Union, it was, of course, inevitable.

It is always dangerous to confer the suffrage upon a mass of people unfitted by education for its exercise. I do not intend to advert, except by a word, to the fact that, as I understood it then, and as I understand it now, the suffrage was not secured to the colored man in a party interest, but to protect him, by giving the ballot as a weapon of defense, against codes, which you will find collated to some extent only in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan in the Slaughterhouses cases (109 U. S., 36), codes which were thought in the North practically to repudiate the pledge contained in Abraham Lincoln's emancipation proclamation, afterwards written by the people into the Constitution of the United States.

I am far from forgetting the difficulties which then beset the

It was difficult for southern men to realize, when the Confederate flags were furled and laid away and they returned to their homes, that the black people whom they had left at home as slaves had become when they next looked upon their faces free men. It was a sudden dislocation of a long-continued status, and of course it took time to adjust their relations to it.

We once attempted-I did my part of it, for which I have never apologized, nor will I—to safeguard, in the interest of the people at large, the right of the colored man to vote in accordance with the constitutional amendments. That bill did I have been glad it did not pass, although I did not pass. honestly all that I could to secure its passage. That it did not pass has been better, I think, for the white men of the South and infinitely better for the colored men of the South, where the Anglo-Saxon and the negro race live side by side and will continue so to live, doubtless, as long as this Government lasts,

They can live in peace, I hope and pray and believe. It will require the utmost of patience and calmness and justice on the part of the white people of the South. The colored men are not cowards; they are ambitious. They are human beings; they were born in this country; they were made by the fourteenth amendment citizens of the United States.

In respect of the suffrage, which the Southern States have adjusted to suit themselves, their administration of it has been left without Congressional interference, even without recent agitation. Of course, our people feel that the just constitutional equilibrium between the States has been distorted and disarranged because of the situation. The South has a larger representation in the electoral college and in the House of Representatives because of the colored vote. The vote has been decreased in one way and another, but the representation has remained.

Senators will bear me witness that it is a good many years since this subject has been discussed at all on this side of the When I first came to the Senate it was often debated with a violence which is almost always inseparable from it. Silence upon it has not been a surrender, except in this way, that it has come to be felt by our people at large that the delicate and difficult problem down there can be best settled without agitation from without.

Now, Mr. President, I think the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, which makes the colored man and all persons born in this country citizens of the United States, which guarantees to them equality before the law, the equal protection of the laws, and those rights of liberty, conscience, property, to which all men are entitled in any decent government, must live. I have no notion that the great body of the people of any section of this country think otherwise. The law must be equally a shield for all entitled to its protection; and I feel sometimes I recall the conversations I had years ago with some splendid and chivalrous ex-Confederate soldiers who have gone from this Chamber, and some still here, upon this difficult and sensitive subject in the South, that it requires more than any other problem in history patience, considerateness, and justice on the part of the leaders of southern thought, instead of vehemence and vituperation.

When I listen to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Till-MAN] in his impassioned utterances, to the opprobrious terms which he sometimes applies to the colored race, uttered in public places, carried broadcast throughout the land, to wound the self-respect and the hearts and the pride of every black-skinned man, woman, or child in the land, I can not help saying to him, in all kindness, that I think he, and he more than others, because of his ability and his prominence and his leadership, is exciting and begetting trouble sometime in the South which all good men ought to strive to avert, strive by fair speech and kindliness and considerateness, not social equality but justice, to avert.

Somebody has sent me a copy of the speech the Senator from South Carolina made in Chicago. I do not know that it is a fair report of it. In one part of the speech, after a man had interrupted him, he is reported to have said:

Oh, shut up, will you? Let me go on. I have forgotten more about the race question than you could learn in forty years.

That is probably true.

Reference was made by the Senator to the recent defeat of Mr. Barnett for municipal judge. The Senator said that after Barnett—whom he did not mention by name—had been elected by white votes "and by the votes of these baboons," looking toward several colored men in the house, "you hounds—

Speaking to the white men in the audience-counted him out—a disgrace that would not happen in the State of South Carolina."

In another part of the same speech he is quoted as saying:

We have in days past stuffed ballot boxes, used shotguns, and elected white men, no matter what the nigger vote, but we never committed the infamy of nominating a negro on our ticket and of later counting him out.

Then when some one in the course of the Senator's speech on the race question spoke of the constitutional amendment, or, I suppose, referred to that-

"How about the law?" the auditor asked.

The Senator is reported to have replied:

The law

This says the Senator shouted, but I can not believe that possible—the Senator replied:

To hell with such law

Now, Mr. President, I take the liberty of saying that speeches like those in which the Senator from South Carolina indulges-I am not lecturing the Senator; I am talking about a subjectare not calculated to bring about the future kindly, friendly, and necessary arrangements and relations between the white people and the colored people in the South, and I do not believe, and I think the people of the North do not believe, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson] said the other day, that in these vehement outbursts on this subject the Senator from South Carolina speaks the real sentiments of the leading thoughtful people of the southern section.

The negro is not a The South owes much to the negro. baboon. Even in slavery days the Constitution referred to the negroes as persons, dividing them into free persons and bound persons; and I think the spirit which will settle the southern question, which is very different in its language and motive from that of the Senator from South Carolina, is expressed in what I read from another distinguished southern leader, the eloquent Grady, unhappily now gone, considerate, kindly, self-respecting, and tender: What of the negro? This of him. I want no better friend than the black boy who was raised by my side, and who is now trudging patiently with downcast eyes and shambling figure through his lowly way of life. I want no sweeter music than the crooning of my old "mammy," now dead and gone to rest, as I heard it when she held me in her loving arms, and bending her old black face above me stole the cares from my brain and led me smilling into sleep. I want no truer soul than that which moved the trusty slave, who for four years while my father fought with the armies that barred his freedom, slept every night at my mother's chamber door, holding her and her children as safe as if her husband stood guard, and ready to lay down his humble life on her threshold. History has no parallel to the faith, kept by the negro in the South during the war.

And it was faith indeed well kept, for every negro knew that as the blue lines of the Federal Army, marching under its flag.

as the blue lines of the Federal Army, marching under its flag, pressed southward, it carried liberty to them, but even that did not woo them to infidelity.

not woo them to infidelity.

Often 500 negroes to a single white man, and yet through these dusky throngs the women and children walked in safety and the unprotected homes rested in peace. Unmarshaled, the black battalions moved patiently to the fields in the morning to feed the armies their idleness would have starved, and at night gathered anxiously at the big house to "hear the news from marster." though conscious that his victory made their chains enduring. Everywhere humble and kindly; the bodyguard of the helpless; the rough companion of the little ones; the observant friend; the silent sentry in his lowly cabin; the shrewd counselor, and when the dead came home, a mourner at the open grave. A thousand torches would have disbanded every southern army, but not one was lighted.

When the master, going to war in which slavery was involved, said to his slave: "I leave my home and loved ones in your charge," the tenderness between man and master stood disclosed. And when the slave held that charge sacred through storm and temptation he gave new meanng to faith and loyalty. I rejoice that when freedom come to him after years of waiting it was all the sweeter, because the black hands from which the shackles fell were stainless of a single crime against the helpless ones confided to his care.

These beautiful words breathe the spirit which I believe in-

These beautiful words breathe the spirit which I believe inspires the white people of the South in their efforts and purpose to work out the destiny of the Anglo-Saxon and the colored races in that region. May God lead them to a solution of the great problem which will be at once honorable and beneficent. The spirit which moves a few prominent and powerful white leaders to make and encourage constant attacks upon the colored race because of their color; to the constant assertion of their inferiority as a race; to the constant advocacy and defense of lawlessness against them is very, very far from the spirit of Walthall and of Grady and other great southerners whom I have had the honor to know; far away, I hope and believe, from the general spirit and sentiment of the South, which will be infinitely more helpful to a solution which in peace and friendliness will give scope to both races than that exhibited by my friend from South Carolina. I do not know of a more certain way to precipitate a struggle between the two races in such an environment than to be constantly violently declaring it to be imminent and inevitable.

I beg pardon of the Senate, Mr. President. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Applause is not allowed under the rules of the Senate.

During the delivery of Mr. Spooner's speech,
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin will suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered, The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. Spooner's speech,

Mr. CARMACK obtained the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me for a moment?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.
Mr. TILLMAN. I had expected, Mr. President, to have a few brief words to say to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] in view of the direct personal attack he has made on me this afternoon, but the latter part of his speech has widened the scope of the reply I wish to make, and I therefore will take occasion in the near future to have something to say on this question and in answer to some insulting allusions he has made.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee Mr. LODGE. whether he would prefer to go on this evening—it is now half past 4-or would be like, rather, to proceed in the morning.

Mr. CARMACK. I believe I would prefer to go on to-morrow if it would suit the convenience of the Senate and be satisfactory to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. PresidentThe VICE-PRESIDENT. Does

Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARMACK. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I sincerely hope we may go on with the consideration of the pending resolution this afternoon. I do not want to inconvenience any Senator, but the debate has been considerably protracted and there are such a number of Senators desiring to speak that I fear we will not be able to close the discussion to-morrow unless we hear this afternoon from the Senator from Tennessee or somebody else of the number desiring to speak. If the Senator from Tennessee says he is not prepared to go on, or for any important reason does not desire to go on now, I will not insist upon it. But to-day is Tuesday; Thursday, day after to-morrow, I believe we have set apart as a day for memorial exercises in honor of the late Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Bate; and so, the first thing we know, we will be at the end of the week without having taken any action.

There are a number of reasons why I desire to press this matter to a vote, but I will not take the time of the Senate now to state them. With this suggestion I submit it to the Senate. However, my preference is that the Senator from Tennessee should go on now.

Mr. CARMACK. I can not say that my reasons for wishing to go on to-morrow are important, because it is a matter of no importance whether I speak at all or not. It is just a matter of preference with me, but I do not wish to press it at all. sire to suit the convenience of the Senate and conform to the wishes of the Senator from Ohio. I can go on to-day.

Mr. LODGE. I made the inquiry because we ought to have an executive session. I am no more desirous of delaying this matter than is the Senator from Ohio. I wish we could get a vote at once. But I do not know whether we shall gain time by compelling the Senator from Tennessee to proceed at this moment. We ought to have an executive session.

Mr. FORAKER. I am entirely willing to leave the matter to the Senator from Tennessee, so far as he is concerned, but there are two or three other Senators who have told me they desire to speak briefly, only for a few minutes. It might suit the convenience of some other Senator to speak now. If some Senators are not heard this afternoon, I doubt whether we shall be able to conclude the discussion to-morrow, as I have been hoping we might do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.
Mr. McCUMBER. I am quite certain that we shall not be able to finish the debate on the resolution to-morrow, and for another reason than the desire of the Senator from Tennessee. I wish we could take the balance of the afternoon in the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar. They will have to be taken up, of course, at some time, and if the Senator from Tennessee would just as soon make his remarks to-morrow morning after the routine morning business, I will take occasion to move the consideration of the pension Calendar.

Mr. CARMACK. That would be satisfactory to me for several reasons, not only because I would rather go on to-morrow. but I share with the chairman of the committee, of which I am a member, the desire to have the pension bills on the Calendar considered. Therefore I put myself in the hands of the Senator from Ohio. I am going to be governed by his wishes and views in the matter. If he would prefer that I should proceed this afternoon, I will do so.

Mr. FORAKER. When the Senator from Tennessee puts it in that way, I dislike to decide it. I have already expressed my preference, that we might make some progress this after-But if the Senator from Tennessee has a preference, I noon.

will yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is a desire on the part of some Senators that we have an executive session, which I take it will not last more than a short time, and we can then return to legislative business, at which time I should like to ask that we proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension cases and bills for the correction of military records.

Mr. KEAN. And transact no other business, Mr. McCUMBER. No other business to be considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. Let us have an executive session.

Mr. KEAN. We are going to have an executive session first.

Mr. LODGE. The executive session first. I beg pardon. Mr. CULLOM (to Mr. Lodge). Move it now.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

STEPHEN M. HONEYCUTT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will announce the first bill on the Calendar, under the order for the consideration of pension bills and bills for the correction of military records.

The bill (H. R. 3498) for the relief of Stephen M. Honeycutt was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "sixtyfive," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the records of the War Department in such manner as to show that Stephen M. Honeycutt, private of Company E, Third Regiment North Carolina Mounted Volunteer Infantry, was enrolled—that is, enlisted and mustered into the military service of the United States—on the 25th day of March, 1864, and honorably discharged at Knoxyille, Tenn., on the 8th day of August, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL BAKER,

The bill (S. 7105) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Baker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Samuel Baker, late of Companies E and D, Fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH S. REESS.

The bill (8, 5542) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth S. Reess was considered as in Committee of the Whole, It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Elizabeth S. Reess, widow of Martin F. Reess, late of Company K, Nineteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN HOLLEY.

The bill (S. 1495) granting an increase of pension to John Holley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of John Holley, late of Company E, Thirteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREDERICK CAREL.

The bill (S. 7056) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Carel was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

YAKIMA RESERVATION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 190.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 190) extending protection of second proviso of section 1 of the act of December 21, 1904, to certain entrymen.

Resolved, etc., That where entries were allowed by the local land office prior to December 21, 1904, of lands purchased from persons who were bona fide settlers on March 5, 1904, such entrymen shall be entitled to the protection extended by the second proviso of section 1 of the act of December 21, 1904, if they have continued to comply in good faith with the requirements of the settlement laws.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The bill itself contains no information of value to the Members of the House, and I suggest that the gentleman explain the provisions of the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the situation is simply this: Under the act passed in December, 1904, opening the Yakima Indian Reservation and recognizing the claims of Indians to certain lands, there was a proviso that where on the 5th of March, 1904, settlers were occupying certain of these lands that the rights of those settlers should not be interfered with and that the moneys expended upon the reservation for irrigation purposes should be considered as full compensation for those lands—in other words, they extinguished the Indian title. But before the notice of the Land Office withdrawing these lands from settlement had reached the local office three or four settlers who resided on the land on the 5th of March, 1904, and protected by the act, relinquished that land and sold their rights to other persons, who in good faith went on the land and had their cases accepted by the local land office. This act simply extends to those individuals the same rights as were given to the others. It affects only three or four individuals. The bill has the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Public Lands and of the Secretary of the Interior. It is simply to protect these three or four settlers who acted in perfect good faith.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Were those people upon these lands there in the first instance rightfully?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They were.

How did they happen to be on lands belonging Mr. MANN.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There was much dispute between the Indians and the Government as to the right to those As a matter of fact, the Government did not recognize the claims of the Indians, and held it out to the public as subject to entry ever since the reservation was established.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.
The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Jones of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS CALUMET RIVER, INDIANA.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23718) to authorize the Chicago, Lake Shore and South Bend Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Calumet River in the State of Indiana.

River in the State of Indiana.

Be tt enacted, etc., That the Chicago, Lake Shore and South Bend Rallway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Indiana, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Calumet River in the southeast quarter of section 34, township 37 north, range 9 west, in Lake County, in the State of Indiana, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is this a unanimous report, Mr. Speaker, from the committee?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; this bill is in the regular form, and unanimously reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And is in the form required by law?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is in the form required by law.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Complying with the provisions required?
Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is in the usual stereotype form.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, I have no objection. The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 21574. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. McCumber, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Taliaferro as the conferees on the part of the Senate:

S. 6833. An act granting an increase of pension to Bettie May

S. 5041. An act granting an increase of pension to George A.

S. 4908. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Kimball; and

S. 822. An act granting a pension to Michael V. Hennessy.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 976. An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the civil war and the war with Mexico—to the Committee on Pensions.

TEMPORARY LEAVES OF ABSENCE FOR HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 81, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution [8. R. 81] authorizing temporary leaves of absence for homestead settlers.

Resolved, etc., That homestead settlers upon the public domain, in those sections where climatic conditions and other causes of an unusual nature exist resulting in personal hardship, are hereby granted a leave of absence from their land for a period of three months from the date of the approval of this resolution. All homesteaders serieusly affected by such conditions or causes shall make application, supported by affidavit, setting forth the facts justifying the leave of absence applied for to the register and receiver of the land office of the district in which their land is situated, and settlers granted such leave shall forfeit no rights by reason of the absence allowed hereluder: Provided, That the period of such actual absence shall not be deducted from the full time of residence required by law.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read,

Strike out the lines 4 and 5 and insert in lieu thereof "North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Minnesota, and Montana."
Strike out all after the word "resolution," in line 8, down to the word "Provided," in line 14.
Strike out the word "such," in line 14; and insert after the word "absence," in line 15, the words "under this resolution."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain to the House the necessity for this legislation?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, we are experiencing an unusually severe winter in North Dakota. We have on an average 4 feet of snow on the level. This snow has drifted so that on nearly all the branch lines of our railroads the service has been practically suspended. Many of the new settlers who are living in the western part of the State are without fuel, and some of them without provisions, and this resolution simply gives them the privilege of moving from their lands, if they so desire, for a term of three months. The people living in the eastern part of our State will not take advantage of this law because they have good houses, but the relief under this resolution will be given to the new settlers, who are living in poor houses, shanties, you might say.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is an inculcation of the lesson that people ought to live in warmer climates, is it not? It would be better for themselves and everybody else.

Mr. GRONNA. That is perhaps a matter of opinion, depending on the latitude in which a person happens to be born. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.
Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, why not amend the resolution so that it would apply to those persons who have entered land there and whose time expires for moving onto the land during the winter. They can not get any fuel either. If they do not move onto the land within six months, then their entry expires. Why would it not be well to amend the resolution so as to apply to those people, as well as to the people who are now on the land?

Mr. REEDER. This would cover them.

Mr. GRONNA. I think the gentleman misunderstands the It will cover the cases of the people he speaks of. Mr. STERLING. Does it apply to any particular part of those States?

Mr. GRONNA. No; it simply grants all a leave of absence outright for three months.

Mr. STERLING. The reason I ask is this: A number of people from my county have entered land in Butte County, S. Dak. They must be there in February, and what I wish to know is whether this extends their right to go there?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; it does. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries may have authority to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries may have authority to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

DESERT-LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21567) extending the time for making final proof in desert-land entries.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for making final proof and payment for all lands located under the desert-land laws of the United States in township 13 south, ranges 12 and 13 east; sections 6, 7, 17, 18, 19, 20, 29, 30, 31, of township 13 south, range 14 east; township 14 south, ranges 12 and 13 east; township 15 south, range 12 east; sections 5, 6, and 7, township 15 south, range 13 east; township 16 south, range 12 east; township 17 south, range 12 east; sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21 of township 17 south, range 14 east, San Bernardino base and meridian, in the county of San Diego, Cal., proof and payment of which has not been made, be, and the same is hereby, extended for the period of two years from the time proof and payment would become due under existing law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object—
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I think this is rather important legislation, especially in view of the fact that the President has virtually recommended the repeal of these desert-land laws, and I shall, for the present at any rate, object.

Mr. SMITH of California. I wish you would allow me to make an explanation, reserving your right to object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand it is a bill to extend the time for perfecting title under these desert-land laws. I think the laws ought to be repealed.

Mr. SMITH of California. But you probably would not undertake to destroy rights that have been acquired by these people while the law is in existence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would not, but I would not extend that I would not enlarge it.

Mr. SMITH of California. I think you would if you would listen to my explanation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.
Mr. SMITH of California. This land is under a system of irrigation, the water being derived from the Colorado River, about which the President's message spoke. The head of the about which the Fresident's message spoke. The head of the canal irrigating this land has been washed out. Under the law settlers of desert lands must make final proof within four years from entry. These people settled there about four years ago. Their time for final proof will expire this spring. It will be impossible for them to restore the canal system by that time,

The law requires that when they make final proof they must show that the land is actually under irrigation.

Mr. MANN. It is under water now.

Mr. SMITH of California. Not at all; this is land that is above the lake and which is affected only by the destruction of their canal. Unless we extend the time and preserve their rights, they are going to default in final proof through no fault of theirs, but through an extraordinary act of natural forces.

Mr. MANN. Is not this the case: That these people are now asking the Government of the United States to rebuild a large portion of the work there for the purpose of permitting them to irrigate their land; and if the Government does expend this money rebuilding these works, why should we then present them

Mr. SMITH of California. That would lead to a discussion of the President's message. My present impression is that the people of that valley are not at all interested in the enactment of the legislation proposed by the President.

Mr. MANN. If it should be determined by Congress to expend there from one million to forty million dollars on this place, there might be some equity in not presenting the land to If it should be determined by Congress not to expend the money, it is time to give these people relief afterwards.

Mr. SMITH of California. I only desire to have this question settled that these people may be relieved of the anxiety under which they now exist. The Government under this proposition will not reconstruct the head of this canal; that would be left to the settlers. This is only a question of giving them the time which they will actually require to reestablish by their own efforts and expenditures the head of that canal

Mr. MANN. The gentleman refers to the "head of the canal I am not familiar with it, but it all comes from the canal leading from the Colorado River?

Mr. SMITH of California. It is a branch of that canal, and when the Government work as proposed by the President is completed, if it should be, it would still be necessary for these people, by their own efforts and their own expense, to reestablish this distributing canal and lead the water to their

Mr. MANN. They would receive the benefit of the money expended by the Government in establishing the large canal which leads from the Colorado River without expense to themselves.

Mr. SMITH of California. In common with others, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not get off with the idea that the people of this valley are asking for the legislation proposed by the President.

Mr. MANN. I can not understand who is asking for it if the people of the valley are not asking for it. If the people of the valley there do not want it I do not know who does

Mr. SMITH of California. I am as ignorant on that point as the gentleman is. Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will wait, then, until we can find out. Mr. SMITH of California. I was as much surprised at the arrival of the President's message as the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how the gentleman could be surprised. It has been announced in the newspapers frequently during the whole month and ever since this session of Congress commenced that the President was intending to do this identical

Mr. SMITH of California. There have been various statements about that, but of course I am not the guide and director of the President. The relief sought in this bill is recommended by the Interior Department and has the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Public Lands. As an act of justice to these people who have inchoate rights in the land. who are likely to lose through no fault of theirs, if we do not extend this time, I think this measure ought to pass.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me? Mr. SMITH of California. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is the unanimous report from the Committee on Public Lands, of which I am a member. The matter came up and the gentleman from California [Mr. Smith] stated about this, in substance, that he wished to extend the privilege, as you may call it—not so much a right as a privilege—to perfect their rights to these lands which they have been prevented from doing by a flood of some kind, for which they were not at all responsible.

By reason of that visitation of God, you might say, they were not able to make out their land rights; hence I voted to extend the time of these people to make out their rights which they would have done but for this flood. Now, those are the merits of the case, as I understand it, and that is the reason why I voted to report the bill, and the bill was agreed to in committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Would the passage of this bill make a precedent that would in any way commit the United States Government to this scheme of remedying the destruction that has been caused out there by a private corporation?

Mr. SMITH of California. Absolutely not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. Speaker, in view of the information conveyed to me by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gaines], that this is a unanimous report of the committee after having gone into the matter carefully, I shall not now object. do think, however, that the legislation is somewhat incautious.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, for the present I shall object. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the fortification appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the fortification appropriation bill, with Mr. Mann in the chair.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state before the debate is resumed that, in my judgment, the time allowed for general debate will not all be consumed, so that the members of the committee may know that the reading under the five-minute rule will probably start before the expiration of the time

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the benefit of the committee that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] has remaining to his credit forty-nine minutes and the gentleman from

New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] one hour and eleven minutes. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa for information about when he will commence under the five-minute rule? I desire to ask some questions for information when we get to that.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am not able to give a definite answer to that question, because certain gentlemen are to speak and I do not know how long they will consume. There are two hours left, and I do not think the time will be consumed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How long does the gentleman expect the bill to run under the five-minute rule-just a mere

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have no idea. We hope to finish it

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is very short.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield such portion of my remaining time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graff].
Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will reserve five minutes for me, if he can.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that through the courtesy of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald I have been assured that we may have such time as we may desire on this side to debate the bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graff] is a member of the committee, and I do not want to limit him as to his time, but I am quite sure that time will be provided for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hep-BURN] without doubt.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I listened yesterday to a patriotic speech, filled with proper pride of the power and prestige of the Republic, and very properly indulged in by a gallant soldier, as was my colleague upon this committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer]. I think it is quite natural that a man who gave so much of the best part of his life to a soldier's career during that great civil war should naturally be enthu-siastic and perhaps a little restive about speedy fortification of our country; but I believe that patriotism can be shown elsewhere than on the field of battle and that the best way in which patriotic qualities can be shown by a Member of Congress is by an economic and wise expenditure of the people's This committee can well afford to defend very confidently the course which it has pursued with regard to its appropriations for the coast defenses of the United States. plan for our coast defense has been one of slow development, commencing away back in 1883 with the passage of an act creating the "Gun Foundry Board," which made a report in 1884, and which resulted in the act of March 3, 1885, creating the so-called "Endicott Board," whose plan, as reported by it January 23, 1886, has been the general basis for all of the subsequent appropriations that have been made by Congress for that purpose. The first appropriation was made, I think, in 1888, and appropriations have been continuously made from year to year ever since, I believe, without interruption. While it is true that the Taft Board, appointed by the President of the United States, and which made its report last year, which report was transmitted by the President of the United States in a message on March 5, 1906, stated that the report of the Endicott Board and its findings were still valuable in the main as to their general recommendations, yet as to the construction of the emplacements and the batteries and the guns it would have been practically valueless if the country had proceeded without any variation in adopting those plans and carrying out those works and building them during the past twenty years, on account of the tremendous changes made in ordnance and fortifications

At the time of the report of the Endicott Board there was no such thing known as a "disappearing gun." Expensive turrets were made. At that time there was practically unknown any such thing as a long range gun Smoothbore guns were then used. Rifle guns have been subsequently introduced. And if the Committee on Appropriations, through its subcommittee on fortifications and coast defense, had followed the recommendations of the Signal Corps, the Ordnance Board, and the artillery of the War Department and made appropriations in accordance with their recommendations year by year for the full amount, it would have resulted in our having fortifications behind the times and utterly out of line with the possibilities of subsequent development of military science. I say that the appropriations made by the committee and afterwards ratified by the act of both Houses of Congress have the commendation of the experience of the last twenty years. Nor have we been slow. have fully kept up with the needs of the times. We have to-day completed two-thirds of the entire plans of the Endicott Board and the Taft Board combined, which is considered to be fully adequate for the full protection of the entire coast line of the United States on the Atlantic and Pacific without the aid of the Navy, for these coast defenses are recommended with the idea the Navy itself shall be engaged in offensive operations and that these coast defenses shall be adequate for the defense of our coasts without the cooperation of the Navy. It is now estimated that $99,000,000, in round numbers, is sufficient to complete all of the projects recommended by the Endicott Board in a modern method in accordance with the recommendations of the best military scientific thought on the subject. then, when the Endicott Board made their recommendations smokeless powder was not in existence. Strange as it may seem, that board did not include in their estimate the cost of ammunition or of reserve ammunition or the cost of sites or the maintenance and construction of barracks for the Coast Artillery, and of this $99,000,000 estimate, which is now considered sufficient to carry out the recommendations of the old Endicott Board, the cost of ammunition and the cost of these other articles, which were not included by the Endicott Board, are not included in the estimate of the $99,000,000.

When the Taft Board reported last year they recommended the abandonment of some four or five different points which had been included in the Endicott plan, which would make a deduction of something like $2,600,000 from the estimate, but they added some six places which were not included in the Endicott plans, which would add some $22,000,000 to the $99,000,000 to enable us to carry out all the plans recommended by the Endicott Board and the Taft Board combined. Of the $99,000,000 total necessary to carry out fully the plans of the Endicott Board, we have already appropriated some $64,000,000, showing a twothirds completion, as I stated, for continental United States. The estimates of the head of the Coast Artillery is that when the plans of the Taft Board are completed and our fortifications in the United States are finished it will make necessary a Coast Artillery of 47,000 men. At present we have in continental United States a Coast Artillery of 10,000 men, 4,000 short of authorization on account of its being impossible

Mr. HULL. Fourteen thousand authorized and 3,000 short; there are 11,000 in now.

Mr. GRAFF. Three thousand two hundred short, I will state, is the testimony exactly, making 11,000 men whom we actually have. This is due to the small inducement at the pay given offered to young men to enlist in these prosperous times.

Mr. HULL. That is about right.
Mr. GRAFF. Therefore we have not now near enough men to properly man the guns which are already in place and ready for operations, and that makes it necessary for us at present to have care takers for the guns at various points on the different coasts of the United States. That is not suggested as an argument why we should not go on toward the completion of this entire scheme, but it does furnish some reason why we should not at least move any faster than other committees of Congress show a willingness to provide the supply of men to adequately operate these fortifications which we are now building. I think I may say safely that there was something said either in the hearings this year or last year to the effect that the fortifications as they now stand without any further work upon them are without comparison in any other country on the globe, so that the talk about the flag being in danger or continental United States having any particular cause to fear by reason of our coast defenses does not seem to have any great foundation; but I think that it is a part of the business of the Committee on Appropriations, in making appropriations for fortifications, as everything else, to consider its fair proportion of the total expenditures of the Government which ought to be devoted to that particular purpose, and I think that when this Congress adjourns and has finished its work it will never be charged that we have not devoted an adequate amount of the people's money toward the preparation for war and defense in war.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRAFF.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does this bill provide for the increase of men necessary with which to man the fortifications?

Mr. GRAFF. That is not a part of our duty.

Mr. GRAHAM. I was afraid it was not. will that come up? Under what bill

Mr. GRAFF. That goes to the Committee on Military Affairs. Mr. GRAHAM. I think that is a very important question and very necessary.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graff] will permit me, what was the question asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Graham]?

Mr. GRAHAM. The procuring of men with which to man the guns in these fortifications.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will yield just a minute, I will say that the Committee on Military Affairs has practically completed a bill increasing the artillery some 5,000 men only, but making the increase in pay of certain officers and noncommissioned officers and electricians that they will enlist up to that point now authorized by law.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am glad to know it. I think it very neces-

Mr. GRAFF. This bill appropriates in all $5,411,883, which is in excess of the appropriation made last year for the same purpose in the sum of $357,890. And if the general average of the appropriation bill is made, of all of them which have been made since 1888, it will be found that this is an average amount and not below the average. In other words, we are not lessening our speed for the completion of these fortifications. The per cent is 3 per cent of the total amount necessary for carrying out the scheme of the Endicott Board. Of this sum, $3,800,000, in round numbers, is devoted to the projects in the coast defense of continental United States, and $1,592,940, or about $1,600,000, is devoted to our insular possessions. Now, then, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Kelfer], my colleague, stated that we were "cheeseparing" in our appropriations for these great purposes. While he did not devote a great deal of time in attacking the economical mood of the committee with reference to the general appropriation for fortifications, he laid particular stress upon two subjects, and one of them was our failure to appropriate some $2,600,000 for the purpose of building an artificial island at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay, between Fort Henry and Fort Charles. The other was his criticism for our alleged "homeopathic" appropriations for our insular possessions. There never has been any serious recommendations for a fortification at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay except within the period of a year. The reference by the Endicott Board in 1886 to the Chesapeake Bay was a matter of suggestion. It did say, by way of suggestion, that it might be well to establish floating batteries at certain points—at a point in Long Island Sound and at two or three other points-and mentions that at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay, all in a single line, and-if there is any significance in that-Chesapeake Bay being the last point mentioned.

The committee has never had an opportunity to receive any light upon this subject except that which has come to us in the last year. And there appeared before us the officers of the War Department and the Secretary of War himself, advocating the building of this island. There does not appear in the hearings any adequate foundation for the result of their estimate of $2,600,000. It seems to me that in a scheme at one point, which alone is to cost some $6,000,000, it is not unwise for Congress to demand a little time in order that the merits of the proposition shall be at least gravely considered, that we shall at least know two things, approximately the real cost of the project, and, secondly, the force of the demand for its necessity. It is significant that throughout Secretary Taft's testimony in favor of this island at Chesapeake Bay he puts the greatest burden of responsibility for his recommendation upon the Navy, and does not assume himself to have technical knowledge sufficient to weigh the real merits of the proposition. In addition to that, he does make it clear that that island is not needed there for the proper protection of the cities within Chesapeake Bay and on the rivers which are tributary thereto. On the contrary, he states that these cities are already amply protected, and that there is no danger of any fleet entering Chesapeake Bay at the present time and successfully attacking any of the cities which surround the borders of the bay or on the rivers which run into the bay. And he himself says that the reason why, and the only reason why, the naval officers desire to have this island built there is because they fear that a hostile fleet would find in Chesapeake Bay a place in which to operate as a base of its operations.

It seems to me, therefore, that the committee were wise at least in postponing action upon this comparatively new proposition of large dimensions until we can get further details both in regard to its naval necessity and in regard to its probable cost.

The next proposition upon which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] takes issue with the committee is the amount of our appropriations for our insular possessions. We have been a great deal more liberal and we have been a great deal more rapid in our appropriations for our insular possessions than we have for continental United States.

The total recommendation of the Taft Board for all our insular possessions, including fortifications at San Juan, Porto Rico, Guantanamo, Hawalian Islands, Guam, and the Philippine Islands, is $22,716,360. Of that amount we have appropriated thus far, including last year, $3,202,920. If the amount of the appropriations recommended in this bill is accepted by If the amount this House and the Senate, and signed by the President, we shall have a total appropriation for the Philippine possessions of $4,795,860, or over 20 per cent of the total amount recommended by the Taft Board for the entire insular possessions.

But I apprehend that the interest of the House is chiefly in the fortifications of the Hawaiian Islands and in the Philippine Islands. These are the two points to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] chiefly gave his attention in his speech. Now, then, the total appropriation as recommended by the Taft Board for their entire scheme for the fortification of the Hawaiian and Philippine islands, is $11,671,262. And therefore we recommend at this time 14 per cent of the total amount necessary for the Hawaiian and Philippine islands. We recommend this year, for instance, in one item, $600,000 for seacoast batteries in the Hawaiian and Philippine islands.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly.
Mr. STERLING. Do I understand that the Department asked for this appropriation of $14,000,000 at this time?

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, no.
Mr. HULL. That is the total.
Mr. GRAFF. I was only speaking of the total amount necessary to complete the plans, which is $11,000,000.

Mr. STERLING. And this is the amount to be used for this

Mr. GRAFF. This year we appropriate the amount to be used this year.

I have here an estimate for 1908 for which we are now appropriating. The estimates for this year, sent in by the War Department, are $5,074,500. We recommend $1,592,940 for insular possessions.

There is another thing to which I might advert, and that is that experience has shown us in the hearings that large available balances, and not always allotted, have been disclosed in almost every item where there are recommendations; showing that of the appropriations which are actually made-less, of course, always than are recommended—the War Department hardly keeps up in its work with the actual amount that is appropriated. That seems to me a very significant fact.

Now, then, with reference to the actual experience of the There are those in this House who do not believe in fortifications for the Philippines. There are those in this House who, like my friend from Ohio [Mr. Keifer], in carrying out at once and as rapidly as recommended by the Department full appropriations for the Philippines. Last year we had an item in our appropriation bill exactly the same as we have to-day—$600,000 for coast defense in the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands, worded exactly as it was worded then. A very sharp conflict took place in this House, and a considerable difference of opinion was manifested even on this side of this Chamber as to the wisdom of fortifications, especially at Subig Bay. It finally passed the House and went to another body, and there it was reduced to $260,000; and that sum was appropriated to the Hawaiian Islands alone. The Philippines were left out in the other body. At all events, it was reduced to $260,000. There is some conflict as to whether the Philippines went out in the legislation or not; but, at all events, was allotted to the Hawaiian Islands, and that was the result of the effort and initiative started by this appropriation committee to get through the selfsame appropriation which is made at this time.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Has that been expended?

Mr. GRAFF. That has not yet been expended. I am glad the gentleman asked me that question. It must not be forgotten that while Army and Navy officers are entitled to the greatest respect for their judgment upon all technical questions pertaining to their profession, yet when it comes down to the question of general business judgment it perhaps would be just as well to leave the decision of those questions where the Constitution placed it—upon the House of Representatives.

Now, then, in regard to the fortification of the Philippine Islands My distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] spoke with pride of the fact that we now vied with England in having the sun never set upon our domain. I take just as much pride in that fact as he does; but I take more pride in the hope and belief that our beneficent influence will stretch beyond our territory. [Applause.] But let us see; some fear that we may be attacked in war by possibly Japan, and that the forces of that country will at once wrest the Philippine Islands from us. The Philippine group consists of thousands of islands, and many of them of considerable The island of Luzon, I believe, is somewhat longer than Cuba; at least 500 or 600 miles long. It is not even proposed that there shall be complete fortifications and defense of the single island of Luzon, but plans only are made for Subig Bay and the protection of the city of Manila by defending the harbor of Manila, principally by placing fortifications upon the island of Corregidor. Now, does anyone believe that the defense of the city of Manila is going to furnish us with an adequate protection against the invasion of the Philippine group? It takes three days for Japan to reach the Philippine group with her soldiers and land them, as I am informed, chiefly with lighters, being able to land on almost any coast; while it takes twenty-five days for us to reach the Philippine Islands with our soldiers from the California coast. Does anyone suppose for a minute that we can expect to rely principally upon fortifications in the Philippine Islands for the defense of that territory? Ah, no. We can not rest upon that sort of Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRAFF.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Suppose it became necessary to transport 5,000 soldiers from any part of the United States in time of war to the Philippine Islands, what would you carry them on?

Mr. GRAFF. I would carry them on Government transports. Mr. GROSVENOR. How many Government transports have

I could not say. I know we have some.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it a fact that when we undertook to send 2,500 troops down to Cuba we had to employ foreign ships to carry them?

Mr. GRAFF. That does not exactly come within the scope of my argument. We are not always discussing the merchant marine.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Inasmuch as the gentleman was talking about the defense of the Philippine Islands, it occurred to me that we might take into consideration the fact that in time of war with any great European power that would command neutrality we would have to go afoot in order to get there.

ter.1

Mr. GRAFF. I believe in a naval base in the Philippine Islands, but I believe that the great source of our protection in the Philippine Islands will be the knowledge of any nation which attacks us of the ultimate consequences to that nation after it takes possession. Does anyone think for a minute that Japan would suppose that because the Philippine Islands are adjacent and even unfortified that ske might safely enter upon that group of islands and take possession of them without taking into calculation the war strength of the great Republic and the ultimate consequences that would be visited upon her? Why, certainly not. We want a naval base either at Subic Bay or at Cavite. I am willing to leave that to the technical information of those who have charge of that and are skilled in that profession, and I believe that in making an appropriation of $1,600,000 in advance of the decision of the question of the location of that naval base we are making an ample appropriation at this time. It is the largest sum which has ever been recommended by any committee for the defense of insular possessions, notwithstanding we have been making appropriations for our insular possessions since 1905. The largest appropriation next to this one was passed in 1905, which was for the sum of $1,318,920. The War Department have already commenced the work of con-structing the emplacements on Corregidor Island and at Subic Bay, and we have proceeded as fast as good judgment would dictate. We must all remember that these appropriations are peculiar in the fact that they remain available in the Treasury, no matter how long they continue unexpended, and the War Department understand this, and in the commendable enthusiasm for pushing energetically these schemes which have been outlined there is no doubt that they want to pile up as much of a surplus as possible, and if Congress should see fit to segregate sufficient money to complete these schemes, no matter if it took a decade to carry out the construction, the War Department would consider it a good thing, because it is not the duty of that Department to give concern to the question of national economics.

We must remember that as we appropriate more liberally than wisdom teaches, we thereby lessen the opportunity for devoting public money to other needed and commendable purposes. So we have been moved by caution and, I trust, by patriotism, and our hearings have been extended. The officers have been summoned before our committee, and for the total amount appropriated we have gone very fully in detail as to the work and the manner of performing it, the need of its immediate construction, the immediate necessity for the money. These things have all been inquired into, as they always are.

I have no fear but that we will complete the fortifications in continental United States away ahead of any probable war, and if within a few months we should be threatened, the world would find the United States the best fortified country on the globe. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Townsend having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bill of the following

On January 14, 1907:

H. R. 21951. An act to authorize the Alabama, Tennessee and Northern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River in the State of Alabama.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].
Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to have read in my time the paper which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Memorial unanimously adopted at large mass meeting of citizens in Cooper Union, New York City, January 3, 1907.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:
Your memorialists respectfully represent that:
This mass meeting of citizens convened at Cooper Union, New York City, January 3, 1907, in the annual celebration of the emancipation proclamation, believes with the author of that proclamation that mastership and servitude should be supplanted by true manhood, regardless of race or color.

We therefore call upon Congress and upon all Americans to accord to the colored people of this country not only the rights, but the respect due to worthy American citizens to the end that United States soldiers shall neither be insulted nor discriminated against because of their color, and that, because of color, the right to vote shall not in practice be anywhere denied.

We appeal to the American people for justice and fair play and for protection from the ignorant and malicious writers and speakers who stimulate race hatred or seek to force the colored people into a peasantry of disfranchised servitors.

We further respectfully memorialize the Congress to cause an impartial tribunal to hear and determine the assertions in the President's message, based upon ex parte proceedings, made against soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, who thereupon have been subjected to a life-long penalty.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

the Twenty-fifth Inlands, life-long penalty.
And your memorialists will ever pray.
Attested by the officers of the meeting.
Rev. Charles S. Morris, Chairman.
H. G. Miller, Secretary.

Mr. Benner's time expired during the reading of the paper, and, by unanimous consent, he was given leave to have the balance printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gaines].

Mr. Gaines of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday a subject was touched upon that I think is of very great impor-

It was alluded to by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] in a colloquial debate between the gentleman from Iowa and his colleague [Mr. SMITH]. Later I made some inquiries of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGER-ALD] on the same subject; that is, the subject of the powder monopoly and the patents that have been issued, and the good policy or impolicy of permitting officers of the Army or Navy to procure patents, etc., to make Army supplies when the discovery is made while acting for and by order of the Government.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn], in his usual trenchant way, used this language-it will be found on page 1108 of the RECORD:

Mr. Hepburn. Then I would ask the gentleman if it is in the contemplation of the Department to establish a factory for smokeless powder?

Right there I will state that the smokeless-powder process was patented by an officer of the Navy, Professor Monroe, while in his line of duty, and for that reason he turned the patent over to the Government of the United States. Now, it seems that some powder monopoly has got hold of that patent and that monopoly is defying the Government of the United States and putting up the price of powder, and we are trying to extricate the Government by making appropriations to build a smokeless-powder factory. I shall refer to that a moment later. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] goes on to say:

And in that connection I want to call the gentleman's attention to a document that was probably laid upon his desk—it was upon mine—treating of the subject of smokeless powder, and of the extravagant expenditures that the Government have been compelled to make because of certain combinations of the manufacturers of smokeless powder. In that document it was stated that the Government had sent two of its officers to one of the arsenais, or to some Government work, for the purpose of studying the manufacture of smokeless powder.

Now, here is an important statement:

Now, here is an important statement:

That they, in the time that belonged to the Government, with the means that the Government furnished, with the aid of other employees of the Government, with its machinery and its material for experiment, discovered certain methods for the manufacture of smokeless powder; that they afterwards secured patents for their discoveries, discoveries made by them while in the employ of the Government, mind you, aided by Government facilities; that they sold these patents to certain people now engaged in the manufacture of smokeless powder, who have entered into this combination and are compelling the Government, through the use of these patents, to pay something more than a hundred per cent above what is stated in this paper to be a fair compensation. I should like to ask the gentleman if the committee have considered that subject, if they have formed opinions with regard to the validity of those patents, and the right of anybody to exclude the Government from the use of its discoveries, made through its agencies; and if these men, now engaged in this combination, are thus using these patents that I should think might, in morals at least, be said to belong to the Government of the United States?

Mr. Chairman, that is a very clear statement of the subject.

Mr. Chairman, that is a very clear statement of the subject, and a subject that, I regret, has not been more thoroughly discussed by Members. It is a matter that came to the attention of the Government of the United States in 1898, and was discussed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and myself, as the RECORD of April 30, 1898, shows. Now the question comes up-and I allude to the fact that Attorney-General Cushing years ago passed upon -has the Government of the United States, or rather should the Government of the United States educate a young man in the Army or in the Navy to be a soldier or a sailor, and should that young man take the Government's time while he is in the employment of the Government, take the money of the Government, take the machinery of the Government, take everything that the Government can give him, and after discovering a military device, patent it and put it in his own pocket or go outside and sell it to a private concern? Should he go and sell it to a foreign government? Later on that same patent, as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, of smokeless powder has come back into the hands of a powder monopoly that threatens the powder business of the country as well as the revenues of the Treasury. That question, Mr. Chairman, was passed upon, as I say, a number of years ago by Attorney-General Cushing, and he said that the patent belongs to the Government of the United States in the case I have stated.

Now, I find that the Senate Report No. 1453, pages 49-50, Fifty-fourth Congress, which I have before me, says: "Charles E. Munroe, chemist, torpedo station, smokeless powder, applications 426445 and 426446."

Professor Monroe secured a patent, about which this report

Right to manufacture under these patents granted August 14, 1891.

I turn now to the speech which I delivered in 1898, where I find that I quote Secretary Herbert and also Senator PERKINS, who was a member of the Senate committee that compiled the report which I have here on this subject. Senator Perkins, in the course of his remarks in this committee, stated as follows:

In this connection I wish to state that Professor Munroe, now connected with the chair of chemistry in Columbia College, discovered smokeless powder when in the Naval Academy filling the chair of chemistry there, and he felt that the invention belonged to the Government, and it was placed by him at the disposal of the Government.

I find on the next page that I inserted in that speech of mine parts of this official Senate report showing a number of patents have been issued to Army and Navy officers for discoveries made in the line of duty except, I believe, three.

Secretary Herbert inserted there a list of these patents in the hearings, and then said:

With the exceptions of Nos. 1, 4, and 3, all the devices were designed by officers in the line of duty and, beyond the mere expense of taking out patents, do not cost the Government anything.

Smokeless powder, says Senator Perkins, was discovered by Professor Munroe when working in the line of his duty.

Mr. Chairman, I intended yesterday to simply drop into the RECORD the syllabus of two cases that I now invite to the attention of the committee. One is the Solomon case—Solomon v. United States, 137 United States, page 342—and the other is Gill v. United States, reported in 160 United States, page 435. The Supreme Court in discussing this question in the Gill case

There is no doubt whatever of the proposition laid down in Solomons case that the mere fact that a person is in the employ of the Government does not preclude him from making improvements in the machines with which he is connected and obtaining patents therefor as his individual property, and that in such case the Government would have no more right to seize upon and appropriate such property than any other proprietor would have. On the other hand, it is equally clear that if the patentee be employed to invent or devise such improvements his patents obtained therefor belong to his employer, since in making such improvements he is merely doing what he was hired to do. Indeed, the Solomons case might have been decided wholly upon that ground, irrespective of the question of estoppel, since the finding was that Clark had been assigned the duty of devising a stamp, and it was understood by everybody that the scheme would proceed upon the assumption that the best stamp which he could devise would be adopted and made a part of the revised scheme. In these consultations it was understood that he was acting in his official capacity as Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, but it was not understood or intimated that the stamp he was to devise would be patented or become his personal property. In fact, he was employed and paid to do the very thing which he did, viz, to devise an improved stamp; and, having been employed for that purpose, the fruits of his inventive skill belonged as much to his employer as would the fruits of his mechanical skill. So, if the inventions of a patentee be made in the course of his employment, and he knowingly assents to the use of such inventions by his employer, he can not claim compensation therefor, especially if his experiments have been conducted or his machines have been made at the expense of such employer.

I will now read a part of the syllabus in the Solomons case:

When a person in the employ of the United States makes an invention of value and takes out letters patent for it, the Government, if it makes use of the invention without the consent of the patentee, becomes thereby liable to pay the patentee therefor.

If a person in the employ and pay of another, or of the United States, is directed to devise or perfect an instrument or means for accomplishing a prescribed result and he obeys and succeeds and takes out letters patent for his invention or discovery, he can not, after successfully accomplishing the work for which he was employed, plead title thereto against his employer.

Mr. Chairman, let us carry those principles a little further, the general principle that I have discussed. Suppose the Government of the United States would equip a ship and place upon it our Navy officials and direct them to go out into the waters and discover a new country, as Columbus was directed to do. Would the captain of that ship take possession of that country in the name of the captain of the ship, or would the captain of the ship take possession of it in the name of the United States? In the name of the latter, of course. So, Mr. Chairman, are these men educated to do exactly what they are doing, to wit, to devote their lives to their country in the military and naval service. Suppose the teachers at West Point did not strive to give the pupils in those schools the full benefit of their knowledge and intelligence as teachers. Suppose they used, say, 75 per cent of their knowledge and ability to teach—brought only a part of their knowledge into action. Would it for a moment be contended that they were doing their full duty? Do we not employ those teachers and do we not employ the Army and Navy officers to do their full duty, and do they not agree when they enter the Army and Navy service to devote their time and attention and military skill and genius to carry on the Government of the United States from a military and naval stand-point to the fullest extent of their abilities? They do. I want to encourage inventions by Army and Navy men, but we should see to it that they do not put us in an embarrassing status at home and abroad by reason of their inventions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a bad policy to let this practice go on without a statute regulating it, and Secretary Herbert recommended that a statute be enacted to do so. We see what ommended that a statute be enacted to do so. trouble we have gotten into. Here is Professor Munroe, who has invented smokeless powder, and I do not know of any other patent on the subject. Mr. Chairman, I stop here to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] how many patents there are of smokeless powder?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I only personally know of two. I do not say, however, there are not others.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who are those patentees?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not now give them from memory. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman had some patent papers in his hand yesterday and I thought possibly he could

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I had two certified copies here yesterday of patents upon smokeless powder or the equivalent of it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can the gentleman put those in the RECORD, so we can all see them?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think I can. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I regret I can not go a little further in this matter. It is certainly something over which Congress should take charge. We are here giving rights or allowing practices that may sometime come back to plague us-evils, indeed, we ought to regulate.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not see the gentle-man from New York present upon the floor, but I am authorized to state that such portion of time as may be required by myself to close this general debate in addition to my time is yielded I do not wish to weary the committee with any prolonged discussion of this bill, but there are a few matters that have not yet been made quite so plain, it seems to me, as they I may say in response to the gentleman from Tennessee that I fully agree with him that if an officer of the Army or Navy makes a discovery in the time of the United States and by use of material of the United States, and the United States wants to use any invention the product of those efforts on his part, the United States ought to have the right to do so without the payment of any royalty whatever. I want to say further that, as I understand it, there is no claim by any human being that the United States has not the right to make smokeless powder for its own use.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me, I understood the gentleman yesterday to say in reply to the gentleman from Iowa that the Government was given the right, and I inferred from that we had to pay for the use of the right.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, the gentleman misunderstood me. The language of the license was in substance that the Navy Department might at its then existing powder factory or at any factories that might hereafter be established by it produce this powder without the payment of royalty. If there be any criticism upon the license at all, it is because it leaves it doubtful as to the right of the Government to produce this powder without royalty for the Army.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What makes it doubtful?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Because the license only runs upon its face to the Navy Department to manufacture, but I am of the impression the Government might buy from the Navy Department for the War Department unlimited quantities of this powder without the payment of royalty. Now, the Government is about to determine whether it is paying excessive prices for its powder or not, and if it is, we will go ahead, as I understand it, and make our own powder, and I do not know anybody who is claiming that we have not that right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell the committee, please, whether or not the Du Pont Powder Company is using the Munroe smokeless powder patent?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think it is making a powder which, perhaps, is not identical with that, but involves the use of the patent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do not they claim to own the patent?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think so; but nobody, at present at least, denies the right of the Government, so far as I am advised, to produce this powder for Government use without the pay-What may be the contention of the company, ment of royalty. I know not, but we are going ahead in our powder factory to make the powder, and I do not think there is any contention that there is any right to claim a royalty from the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. If the gentleman's statement be correct, and I do not doubt it is, then it is inconsequential as to any contention about royalty.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think so; until at least some one claims a royalty.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. If the Government has the power and right, as I think it has, to make this powder these people could not get any royalty.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. By virtue of what right; the gentleman is a good lawyer and could tell us?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I claim the right by the Government to produce this powder without payment of royalty; first, upon the grounds stated by the gentleman himself, and also upon the ground the Government is licensed to manufacture this powder without the payment of any royalty.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a proposition of law. If the Government owns this patent, and if it does not own it it should own it, and a monopoly gets hold of it, the Government should take it away from any monopoly.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not know that there is any connection between the ownership of a license to manufacture without royalty and the ownership of a patent. They are two separate and distinct things. The gentleman contends the Government owns the patent, because the Government agents made the discovery by the use of its machinery and appliances, and I have not disputed it, but even if he was not correct in that the Government has the license to manufacture.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Tell us what the Government is doing to determine whether or not it has the right to make this

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. As long as nobody is claiming any royalty and we are going ahead and manufacturing the powder, why should the Government insist on having a lawsuit with somebody to see whether they are entitled to a royalty or not?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman used the word "determine" just now with reference to what the Government is doing

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. We are going to determine whether we can manufacture this powder cheaper than the Du Pont people. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the proof is that we can, and I hope the Government will.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is all I want to say about the powder question. I want now to call attention to the testimony before the committee of General Murray, the Chief of Artillery of the United States, as follows:

Mr. SMITH. Now, to man the guns proposed to be mounted by the Taft Board would take more than 50,000 men, would it not?

General Murray. It would take exactly 55,110 men, which includes our insular possessions and also the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. SMITH. How many for the continental United States?

General Murray. In the United States, for the defenses completed and projected by the Taft Board, 47,709 men.

It would then appear that between 7,000 and 8,000 men would be required to man the proposed fortifications in the insular possessions and more than 47,000 men to man the fortifications in the United States, making an aggregate of more than 55,000 The whole Army of the United States now amounts to less than 60,000 men, and the annual Army bill is for about $70,000,000. In other words, counting the pay and maintenance of the troops and the new barracks and those things that are every year appropriated for, it costs about $1,200 for every man in the American Army. So that if we were to man the proposed Taft Board's fortifications it would cost this Government $66,000,000 a year to so man them as to furnish a sufficient number of men, with each man serving theoretically twenty-four

It is not so important what we appropriate in any given fortification bill as it is important as to what is to be the constant and yearly expense imposed upon the Government for the manning of the fortifications; and the proposed plan contemplates adding to the expense of this Government more than $50,000,000 a year forever. It is as against the rapid growth of an insti-tution which is expensive—not in what it costs to establish it, but in what it costs to maintain it—that I have always resisted too rapid progress in the fortifications at home and abroad. I am a hearty believer in the "big stick," but I do not believe in carrying a stick so large that we will be worn out with the mere weight of the stick and can not wield it when the hour of emergency comes. It is important that we do not squander our military resources, all of them, in time of peace, but reserve some strength for the hour of struggle.

And so your committee has tried at once to provide defenses suitable for this country and our insular possessions, but which will not impoverish the people by the cost of a great army to man them in time of profound peace. My distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. Graff] has well pointed out to the House that, owing to the exposed condition of the insular possessions, the committee has, in effect, recommended a progress in the Philippines and in Hawaii five times as rapid as the progress we have made in the defense of our own homes and our own hearthstones. And yet, notwithstanding this fact, and notwithstanding the fact that we are giving $600,000 more for the insular possessions this year than we gave last year or year before, it is contended that we are not yet proceeding fast

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

as to the merits of what the gentleman is saying, because I am very interested in what he does say, does he not think that, owing to the exposed condition of our insular possessions, more rapid progress should be made than upon continental soil?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I certainly do, Mr. Chairman, and so stated in opening the debate of this bill. But how much faster?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. As much in proportion as our in-sular possessions are exposed to a greater extent than those upon this continent.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not grant that, Mr. Chairman. I would say that in determining the relative speed at which we should fortify insular and continental United States we ought to take into consideration the greater danger to which the insular possessions are exposed, and also the fact that they are of less importance than continental United States.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I agree with the gentleman on the less importance.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes, sir. Now, I shall say nothing further upon that subject at this time; but I do want to speak, but briefly, about the proposition to fortify the mouth of Chesapeake Bay. We are told in the hearings, and told in the report of the Taft Board, that the We are told in the Endicott Board realized the importance of fortifications at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay, but condemned them as being too extravagant or too expensive to be considered at that time. have in my hand the report of the Endicott Board, covering 400 pages. That report fails to bear out the statement made with reference to the judgment of that board. The report, on page 25, contains an estimate for floating batteries, including armament. In that estimate Chesapeake Bay is not mentioned, but on page 9 this language is used:

Besides the floating batteries hereinafter specifically recommended, the board desires to point out that while not required at present, others may be useful to guard the eastern end of Long Island Sound and the approaches by that side to New York, and the Chesapeake Bay as an outer line of defense to Baltimore, Washington, and Hampton Roads.

The Endicott Board recommended no artificial island and no fortification there, and no floating batteries. But it recommended floating batteries at the places named on page 25, and then on page 9 said it might be—it was possible—that floating batteries could be made useful at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay.

This is all there is in the Endicott Board report tending to sustain the contention that the Endicott Board believed that this artificial island ought to be constructed, and failed to recommend it because of its expense.

But suppose I should concede that the Endicott Board wanted an artificial island at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay, and failed to report it because of its expense. The Endicott Board reported a scheme of fortifications of the coast at an expense of $126,000,000. The Taft Board reported a scheme of fortifications of the coast at a cost of $125,000,000, or less money. dicott Board thought this island so expensive that they would not enter upon it, how comes it that the Taft Board thinks that it is cheaper?

The Endicott Board was a Congressional board. The Endicott Board had power to spend money. The Taft Board was created by Executive order, and never had a dollar at its disposal from beginning to end for the purpose of making sound-ings or borings of any kind. If I should concede, as claimed, that the Endicott scheme left this out because of its expense, I should say that the Taft Board, that recommended it, never made any investigation to find out how expensive it would be. Why do I say that? Because that is the testimony of Colonel Abbot, of the Engineer Corps. Colonel Abbot says $2,600,000 was for the creation of an artificial island.

That is as accurate an estimate as can be made without boring, etc. Such preliminary estimates can not be as correct as if we had made surveys, etc. We have to make assumptions as to some things. That sum will be approximately what will be required to create an area of some 50 acres, which the artillery say will be necessary for the number of guns planned to go on that island.

But they say the Endicott Board was in favor of this scheme, but thought it too expensive.

Mr. MAYNARD. Who says it was too expensive?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Colonel Abbot says that the Endicott Board thought that; and the Taft Board, which did not have a dime available for borings, and has not made any at all, is in favor of the creation of this artificial island and the establishment of a fortification at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay. Secretary Taft when before the committee declared that all the cities upon the Chesapeake Bay were impregnably fortified. This fortification is regarded as in the nature of an outer line of

The Congress of the United States has had many examples of entering upon great works without accurate estimates. Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Without expressing any opinion may not be without interest to know that on the 22d of February, 1855, Mr. Stanton, of Kentucky, offered, while the House had under consideration the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, an amendment "for removing the then present Dome on the central portion of the Capitol and the construction of one upon the plan designed by Mr. T. U. Walter, architect of the Capitol extension, $100,000.

In the debate upon that bill, Mr. Stanton said it was important that the appropriation should be made at once, as he understood the change could be made before the meeting of the next Congress

That was an assertion that this $100,000 was to be in full for removing the old Dome and constructing the new one, because he said the change would be completed, if the money was given, before the next meeting of Congress

When Congress next assembled the old Dome had been torn away, so that Congress could not recede, and a roof had been put over the Rotunda. Congress was informed on March 14, 1856, by the Hon, Jefferson Davis, Secretary of War, that the architect estimated it would take $945,000 to build the new Dome.

On March 2, 1867, the last $15,000 of $965,000 was appropriated for the construction of the Dome.

Such has been the history of enterprises thus heedlessly entered upon by Congress. Without a boring to know what they are going to build this island on, without any knowledge whether the ground under Chesapeake Bay is such that they can there dredge the material to build the island of or must go elsewhere for it, without a survey, without an estimate, they come to Congress and demand $2,600,000 upon the guess of somebody of how much it will cost to build an artificial island, when they do not know whether the foundation is rock or quicksand and do not know whether the material adjacent to it in the bay, that normally would be dredged to make the island, is rock or sand.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, certainly.
Mr. MAYNARD. How are you going to arrive at what would be the cost of building this island unless you make some provision in the bill for an appropriation to pay for a survey?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I take great pleasure in answering the gentleman. For many years the fortification bill has carried an appropriation for the reclamation of sites, out of which surveys and estimates for such purposes have been made. have in my hand a memorandum of an answer received by telephone this morning from the Treasury Department, stating that there is unexpended a balance in the Treasury to the credit of this fund, available for this purpose, of $151,876. The Engineer's Department estimates that it will take $3,000 to make these surveys, borings, and estimates. There is the sum of $151,876 available for that purpose now unexpended in the Treasury.

Now, if the War Department deems this of paramount importance, it will certainly assign the necessary money for these surveys from this large sum at its disposal. And if the War Department does not deem it sufficiently important to make a survey before demanding that we give $2,600,000 upon a project that may, like the Dome of the Capitol, cost ten times the amount originally estimated, I for one will not vote to give it any money at all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to detain the Committee longer, and unless the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] has some time that he wishes to yield, I will call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is nobody on this side who desires time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction of fire-control stations and accessories, including purchase of lands and rights of way, and for the purchase, installation, operation, and maintenance of necessary lines and means of electrical communication, including telephones, dial and other telegraphs, wiring and all special instruments, apparatus, and materials, coast signal apparatus, and salaries of electrical experts, engineers, and other necessary employees, connected with the use of Coast Artillery; for the purchase, manufacture, and test of range finders and other instruments for fire control at the fortifications, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $700,000.

Mr. MAYNARD, Mr. Chairman I offer the following amend.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, in line 8, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

"To make all necessary surveys, borings, and other investigations necessary for and the preparation of an accurate detailed estimate of what it would cost to construct proposed artificial island for fortifications between Capes Charles and Henry, Chesapeake Bay, and to ascertain whether the title to the site of said proposed artificial island can be obtained without expense to the United States, $3,000."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this amendment that this was not covered by the Endicott scheme and not authorized by law to be executed, and therefore the proposition is not authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa inform the Chair what authority of law there was for the Endicott scheme and whether the Endicott scheme has been adopted by law?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I understand that Congress in 1885, shortly after the report of the Gun Foundry Board, passed a law creating a board to report a plan of fortifications, and that board reported in 1886. There has been no express act of Congress adopting the plans proposed by that board. They were prepared, however, by direct authority of Congress, and Congress has from time to time appropriated money for carrying out the plans of the Endicott Board. Last year the President, without any authority from the legislative branch of the Government, appointed a board to revise these plans. This project here referred to originates in the report of this executive board.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman inform the Chair whether the fortification bills in the past making new appropriations included any report of the Endicott Board?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I may say that they never so expressed upon their face. Reports accompanying all of the bills, as far as I now recollect, state that they are in furtherance of the execution of the plan of the Endicott Board.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia wish to be heard now?

Mr. MAYNARD. No: I will yield now to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I understand the point of order to be that this proposed amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Virgina [Mr. MAYNARD] is not in line with any preexisting law, or in line with the recommendations the Endicott Board appointed by President Cleveland by virtue of the act passed in 1883. I presume, Mr. Chairman, if that rule should be applied, that at least nine-tenths of the entire appropriations provided for in the bill would go out on a point of order. This is a general fortification bill; it is a bill that has to come from the Appropriations Committee to provide generally for fortifying our seacoast and for other like purposes. If there is anything in the bill that exactly and specifically provides for any defenses that are provided for by law, I do not now recollect it. There is not an appropriation anywhere except where they have been generally recommended by either the Endicott Board, the Taft Board, or the War Department perhaps, or officers of the War Department, and are not in accordance or in pursuance of any specific plan at particular

One of my criticisms upon the bill which has been emphasized to-day by the eloquent remarks of both the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. Graff] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] is that we do not do anything in a substantive way under our proposed appropriations. They both come here to-day, admitting what I charged, and that is that it is not proposed to make any definite, conclusive, complete appropriations for any fortifications in the United States, but the highest per cent for any of these appropriations is to be only 14 per cent of all that is asked for, and nothing in any case sufficient to complete anything. Are any of these appropriations in pursuance of existing law? It is within the jurisdiction, Mr. Chairman, of the committee and of the House to appropriate for all that Congress thinks will be needed to safeguard our seacoasts so as to provide general defenses at particular places, naval stations, and so on, in the island possessions. But the point of order is now made in order that the most important of all recommendations for defensive fortifications that have been made shall not have a dollar expended in the direction of preparing to make them-not even to make the necessary investigations at that place. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Smith] has just demonstrated that as long ago as 1885 and 1886 the Endicott Board looked to the matter of the importance of appropriating money to defend the mouth of Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. KEIFER.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. As the amendment is offered the latter part of it reads as follows:

And to ascertain whether the title to the site of said proposed artificial island can be obtained without expense to the United States, $3,000.

If this amendment is adopted as it reads, will it not commit us to the whole scheme?

Mr. KEIFER. I don't care if it does.

Mr. MAYNARD. Suppose it does.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to be committed to that scheme, which the great naval and military men of our country and the Secretary of War and the President of the United States think is of the first importance in the matter of our coast defenses. Does anybody dispute that?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. Then the record must be looked into as to the report of the Taft Board and the messages from the President and the reports of the Secretary of War to confirm what I have said, and the Record of to-morrow's proceedings containing my speech will cite or quote from all or most of them.

Mr. Chairman, I would be somewhat satisfied with the point of order if I felt that there was any possible way by which we were to get at this most important matter. Gentlemen would indicate that they were willing to fortify the mouth of Chesapeake Bay if somebody will voluntarily, at his own expense, for that is what it means, make the necessary investigations and then perform that wonderful feat of informing the distinguished gentlemen sufficiently to convince their minds that the distinguished people who do this work in advance are right. is said that we have a law now that authorizes the expenditure of money to make these investigations. If that is so, according to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], then this is in line of existing law. I do not believe this is exactly true.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not the law that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] referred to, authorizing these expenditures the law which authorizes the expenditures to be made within the recommendations of the Endicott Board, which is the Board created by act of Congress?

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Taw-Mr. KEIFER. NEY1, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has given a complete answer to that long argument of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], in which he attempted to show that these people could go with the present state of the law and find out whether it was practicable or feasible to build an island in the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay. This proposition is in general line with the appropriations needed, following not alone what the Endicott Board recommended, as will be found on page 9 of that Board's report, but following the unanimous report of the Taft Board, and it asks that some steps shall be taken in the direction of finding out whether it is practicable and feasible to build an island or erect some other kind of defense in the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay. So, Mr. Chairman, I think we are in proper line with all that is to be found in the bill, in so far as this amendment is con-cerned, and we are in line, too, with the general purpose so clearly stated and emphasized by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graff] this morning, just supplemented by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], that we are not in the work of making defenses for our country, but we are in the work of building by piecemeal patches to that work, following an unbusinesslike idea that no individual or corporation ever adopts. Think of a farmer who wanted a house to cover his family and a barn for his stock and grain who would say: "I have so much money, but I will not build a house or a barn. I will not make any completed improvements: I will freeze to death first. But I will put in the foundations for both house and barn this year, and in seven years "-following the rule of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH]—"maybe I will have something under cover. I live long enough, if I am not frozen to death, I will be all right in time." That is the theory upon which we are proceeding, and that is the theory of the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD].

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this amendment is in order. The Endicott Board was authorized by act of Congress, and the report of that board was submitted to Congress and adopted by Congress, and, as admitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], on page 9 of that report that board made certain recommendations and, to use the language of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], which I presume is the language of the report, said that it might be necessary to create defenses and fortifications at Cape Charles and at Cape Henry. The bill which is being considered by this committee is in furtherance of that report, and in offering this amendment to the bill it is carrying out the report of the Endicott Board, so that we may determine by an accurate survey what kind and how costly a class of defense is needed at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay, and I think it is entirely pertinent and in order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that in the act of Congress authorizing the appointment of the Endicott Board Congress by law provided that that report should be adopted or that any act of Congress has been enacted since that time specifically adopting the report of the Endicott Board. On the other hand, Congress has provided in annual appropriation bills for the expenditure of money for fortification purposes, usually in general language making appropriations for purposes general in their nature, to be expended by the War Department. In a few cases appropriations have been made for specific purposes, but as a rule in general language.

In the opinion of the Chair, expressed with some doubt, under the practice of the House at least, the items in the appropriation bill in general language are probably in order, though the Chair does not undertake to rule upon the question at this time; but the Chair thinks that the introduction of a new item for a work not in progress is not in order, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. TALBOTT. I understood from the gentleman from Iowa that $151,000 is appropriated in this bill for surveys; that it is in the Treasury and available. Now, I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that he offer an amendment making $3,000 of that specially available for this survey.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to write an amendment to offer. I want to give notice that I desire to offer the amendment at this point and I shall ask later that we return to this item that I may offer that amendment.

Mr. LITTAUER. I can not understand the gentleman's motion.

Mr. MAYNARD. My request was that I desire to offer another amendment at this point, and I desire to prepare the amendment and shall ask to return to this item later in order that I may offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimons consent

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I must object.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York objects.
Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment

On page 2, in line 8, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "to make all necessary surveys, borings, and other investigations necessary for and the preparation of an accurate detailed estimate of what it would cost to construct proposed artificial island for fortifications between Capes Charles and Henry, Chesapeake Bay, and to ascertain whether the title of the site of said proposed artificial island can be obtained without expense to the United States, $3,000, out of any money in the Treasury which may now be available for this purpose."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order against this proposed amendment, and I think I can make it so plain that the gentleman from Virginia will not claim his amendment is in order. In the argument I referred to the fact that money was available in the hands of the War Department to make this survey. In the acts for a number of years, including the act passed in 1904 for the year

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa make the point of order against the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. On the assumption it has been reported to the House. Pending that, does the gentleman from Virginia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MAYNARD. I will submit the question to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, while, as the Chair stated before, the matter is in doubt and it may be to a certain extent an arbitrary ruling, the general appropriation under the practice of the House might probably be used by the War Department for the purpose of making the survey proposed by the amendment, but, in the opinion of the Chair, it is not within the province of the House, contrary to the rules, on this appropriation bill to provide for a work not in progress, This work is not in progress, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction of sea walls and embankments, $25,000.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit an amendment at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by including, on page 2, between lines 23 and 24, the following words:

"For the purchase of land adjoining Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn, N. Y., and necessary for the enlargement of said fort and the maintenance and preservation of the fortifications at said fort, the sum of $250,000."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order.

Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order? Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman from New York requests that I reserve the point of order, and I see no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa reserves the

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that has been repeatedly recommended by the War Department. They are now constructing at Fort Hamilton very heavy fortifications, but the reservation is too small and the improvements there too little to accommodate sufficient force to take care of fortifications already constructed at an expense of $2,500,000. This addition to the fort and the construction of other barracks for the purpose of accommodating the necessary force to take care of such fortifications as already exist, were recommended by Colonel Greenough, commandant at this place for several years. It is also recommended by Secretary Taft and by Gen. Frederick D. Grant, the commandant of that department. This was especially called to my mind by a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce in the city of New York on the 3d day of January, 1907, calling attention to the fact that the artillery force was not sufficient at New York City to take care of the fortifications that were there at present. There are not barracks enough, there is not room—not the proper parade grounds, or anything else at this place—and the Government before expending large sums of money on insular possessions certainly ought to take care of the metropolis of the country. This bill provides for over a million and a half of dollars to be expended principally in new fortifications in the Philippines. It is a very grave question whether any money ought to be expended in the Philippines until the coast of our country is properly protected. A proposition has been made by citizens residing in the neighborhood of this fort, that the Government either ought to abandon the fort or it ought to take care of it. Anyone who has been through that fort lately knows that its condition is shameful; that the fortifications that have been put there at large expense—I am informed over $2,500,000 within the last few years—are going to rack and ruin. The guns are rusty, everything shows lack of proper repair and preservation, because there is no place there in which to keep a sufficient force to take care of the fort. This is a matter, it seems to me, that requires the prompt attention of Congress. I see no reason why any objection should be made to the expenditure of this small sum for this very necessary purpose.

I will ask that the resolution to which I have referred, from the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, be appended to my remarks.

The resolution is as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, New York, January 10, 1907.

New York, January 10, 1907.

At the monthly meeting of the chamber of commerce, held January 3, 1907, the following in reference to House bill No. 17347 to reorganize and to increase the efficiency of the artillery of the United States Army was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas this chamber feeling a deep solicitude that this great and most important harbor and entrance for the commerce of the United States should be amply protected by all possible and practicable local fortifications and be supplied with the most modern and effective weapons of war, did on January 4, 1900, pass a series of resolutions intended to impress upon Congress the great value and absolute necessity of action to remedy this defect in our system; and

"Whereas Congress and the United States authorities, under its action and approval and furtherance of this idea and desire, passed requisite acts and have created and mounted at its forts at the entrance of the harbor suitable guns, etc., as suggested by the chamber, and for which the chamber does hereby express its gratitude and acknowledgment; and which the chamber does hereby express its gratitude and acknowledgment; and

"Whereas the necessity of an important addition to the personnel of qualified officers and men acquainted with the new and changed character of the equipment and needed to supply the additional work required in all parts of such changes and additions, do hereby most earnestly ask and urge upon Congress the adoption and passage of House bill 17347, entitled 'A bill to reorganize and to increase the efficiency of the artillery of the United States Army,' calculated to supply the actually needed additions, etc."

MORRIS K. JESUP, President.

Attest: George Wilson, Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to my colleague that I am heartily in favor of some provision being made for the enlargement and proper repair of the fort at Fort Ham-ilton. A number of Army officials from time to time have strongly urged that additional land be acquired at that place and that certain changes be made in the present arrangement of the buildings. If this reservation is to be enlarged it should be at once or in the near future. Otherwise it will be impossible for the Government to acquire lands for that purpose at this place. Land in the neighborhood of this fort is worth to-day between $10,000 and $15,000 an acre, and the price is rapidly enhancing, so that if the Government is ever to enlarge this fort the land should be acquired now while the prices are within reason and not wait until it will be utterly impossible to acquire

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I wish to inquire for information how long it is since old Fort Hamilton was completed in its present state?

Mr. FITZGERALD. "The memory of man runneth not to the contrary." I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The Government, then, as I understand, bought all the land that was then deemed necessary, and completed a fort; and this is to enlarge or extend that work which has heretofore been once completed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The system of coast defenses requires in the vicinity of Fort Hamilton a large number of modern guns that were not contemplated at the time Fort Hamilton was established. There is necessity for accommodation for a much larger number of troops than was contemplated when the present site for a reservation was acquired. The result is that from time to time various officials have requested and recommended that this additional land be acquired. In the last session of Congress, when the sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration, this item estimated for by the Department was considered very briefly and hastily by the committee, and a remark that was made by an official gave the impression to the subcommittee that it was not an imperative need at that time. The fact is that if the Government intends to enlarge this reservation-and it has been recommended by every official who has been on duty in that vicinity, and has received the approval of the Secretary of War on several occasions-provision should be made soon, because the price of land in that vicinity is very high and rapidly increasing. The people of the neighborhood are not anxious for the enlargement of this reservation. This is not a land scheme. Within the past month residents of the locality petitioned the gentleman from New York [Mr. Waldo] to have the entire fort abandoned, as they believed it was a detriment to the property in the vicinity. Upon the request of the gentleman from New York a report was made by the Secretary of War, based upon information called for by him from several officials, who said that this fort was an essential feature of the defense of the city of New York, and that it was necessary to enlarge the fort. If this be true, something should be done; and if it can not be done in this bill, I wish to assure my colleague that I shall do everything in my power to have the committee provide for this item in the proper bill—the sundry civil appropriation bill. These reports that have been made must be considered, and if the land desired can not be acquired at this time it will be impossible for the Government in the future to acquire the land at all. I simply wish to say this, so that my colleagues on the committee will realize that during this present session of Congress it will be necessary to consider this item seriously and to determine definitely whether the land shall be acquired or whether the plans of the Department, so far as the renovation and enlargement of this fort are concerned, shall be abandoned.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I desire to insist upon the point of order simply upon this ground, Mr. Chairman: It is practically conceded, and it is true, that Fort Hamilton is completed. It has been a fort since the memory of man runneth not to contrary. It is proposed to enlarge the inclosure around the existing fort. Those appropriations have never been carried on the fortification bill. This land is not desired for fortification purposes. There is nothing to show that it is proposed to put a battery upon this land, and there is no design to put a battery upon this land. But it is proposed, perhaps, to have barracks and have quarters and have something incident thereto to enlarge this fortification site.

Now I would like and need, greatly need, an appropriation to enlarge the Federal building in my own town; and yet it is not "a continuance of a work in progress." That building has been completed, and it is not in continuation of a work in progress to enlarge the site or that building. This Fort Hamilton has been completed. This proposition here now is to enlarge it, and is no more a continuance of a work in progress than to put an appropriation on the sundry civil appropriation bill for every public building in America to enlarge and extend it. Such appropriations are never carried on the forti-fication bill, and never should be carried in the sundry civil

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the contention of the gentleman that this amendment will be subject to the point on this particular

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I contend that it is not in order at all

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, it is.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa (continuing). And second, it is especially not in order upon this particular bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman think that no appropriation for the purchase of land for forts would be in order upon the fortification bill?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, no; I would not say so, because it has been the practice from very early time, and the practice may be stated as defined in the rules of the House, to carry general appropriations for sites for seacoast batteries, not for any specific site at all, but generally for sites. But here is a proposition to enlarge an existing, established, and completed That, I say, is not in order upon this bill. I do not think it will be in order upon the sundry civil appropriation

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it was held in order upon the sundry civil appropriation bill at the last session of Con-

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the gentleman say that it was so held?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was held to be in order. The Chair can get a ready reference to that ruling, I am sure.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, it is not a completed fort. The new fortifications that were commenced here are not completed. This additional land is now needed to take care of the troops just as much as the land between two

In the first place, there are already provisions in this bill for the purchase of land, one for the purpose of establishing electrical plants in fortifications, and another to buy land in the Philippines for new fortifications. This amendment, it seems to me, is for the preservation of a fortification rightly to be considered as still under construction. One thing must be con-structed anyway and that is quarters for the troops, because they have been practically all burned down. Whenever the barracks are to be constructed, they ought to be constructed as they are intended to remain permanently, be in such size and form as will take care of the proper force; that is as much a continuance of a work under way as anything provided for in any line the gentleman has in his bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York permit the Chair to ask him a question with reference to the language of the amendment:

Necessary for the enlargement of said fort-

And so forth. Is the declaration that this land is necessary a change of existing law or not?

Mr. WALDO. I think it is not, for the reason that it is not only an enlargement, but it is necessary for the preservation and care of the present fortification. That is the language of that amendment. The War Department has repeatedly so declared. Every commandant of that fort for the last ten or fifteen years has so declared. The present commander of the Department of the East has so declared, and there is nobody else in authority who can give any more information or better information than we now have.

The CHAIRMAN. While the Chair thinks there may be some question in reference to the form of amendment making a declaration that this purchase of land is necessary, and that possibly that might be construed to be a change of existing law, yet the Chair assumes that that is more a matter of argument than it is a declaration of law. The rulings have been that where the Government owns land, or a site, the purchase of adjoining land is not subject to a point of order and is a continuance of a work progress. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that two arguments have been made in support of this amendment, under the reservation of the point of order, I simply desire to urge upon the committee that it would be unwise to incorporate this amendment, for this, if for no other reason: Estimates of this character are sent to the subcommittee on the sundry civil bill. This subject was never brought before the committee having consideration of this bill. There has been no consideration of it, or opportunity for that committee to go into the merits of the proposition. I say it in all kindness, but my distinguished colleague from New York, the gentleman who speaks in favor of this amendment, never called it to the attention of the subcommittee of which he is a most useful member. Not the slightest consideration has been possible at our hands of an estimate made for another bill, where this amendment, if proper, would be considered by the committee. And for this House to incorporate large additional appropriations for items that have not been considered and could not be considered, because not referred to the committee in charge of this bill, would not only establish a bad precedent, but it is unwarranted, even upon the opinion, in my judgment, of such capable Members as the two gentlemen who have spoken in favor of the amendment. I therefore submit that the amendment ought to be voted down, to let the estimate of this expenditure be investigated by the subcommittee to which the estimate has gone for this enlargement. I personally know nothing as to its merits, and that is the situation of all the subcommittee except the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish the gentleman would take my assurance that it is a perfectly proper appropriation to make at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman's assurance is perfectly good with me on almost any subject; but I do think that when he wants $250,000 on this bill, he might, in kindness to the rest of us, tell us about it before the bill is reported, so that we may know that the subject is coming up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The reason it was not called to the attention of the subcommittee considering this bill was that I understand that, under the practice of the House, it properly went to a different subcommittee.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is undoubtedly true.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is proper for me to say this in explanation of my own position.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is undoubtedly a good explanation, but it is also a good reason why the House should not now vote in favor of the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My colleague [Mr. Waldo] has so well presented the reasons for this appropriation that, inasmuch as it is in order upon this bill, it seems to me we can not do less than to urge all those reasons upon the members of the committee and ask them to accept the statements and vote the money for this very necessary and proper work.

Mr. GILLETT. Has the sundry civil bill been reported or considered at this session?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not a member of the subcommittee that considers that bill, and I am unable to state from my own knowledge whether the bill has been considered by that committee.

Mr. GILLETT. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The sundry civil bill, as I understand it, has been printed for the use of the subcommittee and contains this item for consideration by the subcommittee.

Mr. GILLETT. So that there is still opportunity for this item to be considered by the proper committee.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And it will be considered and accurate knowledge obtained as to the merits of the project, if opportunity is given to that committee to investigate it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman is as favorably impressed by the soundness of the argument made in favor of this item by my colleague [Mr. Waldo] and myself, it seems to me that we are justified in urging the amendment at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am always favorably impressed with the remarks of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is possibly familiar with these waters and with the system of defense from Sandy Hook up to New York Now, I want to ask him if he honestly believes that Fort City. Hamilton to-day is any more essential to the defense of New York City than a battery would be in the middle of Central

Mr. FITZGERALD. The men best equipped to express an opinion on that point have stated within three weeks that this feature is absolutely necessary for the defense of New York.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I ask the gentleman from New York what his opinion is, with his familiarity with the whole location?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from New York is not so presumptuous as to give an opinion upon that point against the expressed opinion of the experts of the War Department. I read with much interest the statement that was made by these gentlemen, that the guns erected at Fort Hamilton will control Ambrose channel, which is now in course of completion. They say that they are essential for the defense of the harbor at that point. I assume that the officials of the Department are able to determine that question. The Secretary of War had a consultation with the Chief of Artillery, the Chief of Ordnance, and, I think, the head of the Bureau of Ordnance, and they said that it was absolutely necessary as a part of the system of fortifications at the harbor of New York to maintain this particular place.

Personally, if it were not necessary, I would welcome the abandonment of the fort, because I believe that it does prevent the development, in a very desirable way, of a very development, in a very development way, in a ve sirable portion of the city in which I reside. But the War Department insists that this is imperative, that this fort must be maintained, and I am unable to offer an opinion against the expression of the officials of the War Department. Perhaps the gentleman from Connecticut is better able to pass on that question than myself or the officials of the War Department.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. It is because I doubted the accuracy of my own judgment that I appealed to the gentleman from New York. I have not got his opinion yet, although he has quoted the opinion of other people.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My opinion is based upon the information by men who are eminently qualified to give an opinion, that this is an essential feature of the defenses of the harbor of New York.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in response to the remarks of the gentleman from Connecticut that anybody who lives in the city of New York will appreciate the force of the argument in support of this amendment. Perhaps if the gentleman lived in a small town in Connecticut, or in the western part of this country, two or three thousand miles from the coast, he might think it was not necessary to defend the harbor of a great city like New York. But the entrance to this harbor at Fort Hamilton is 12 miles wide, and small vessels can come into the harbor 10 miles distance of the fortifications at Sandy Hook, and when the Ambrose Channel is built, they can come in a direct line to the Narrows between Fort Hamilton and Fort Wadsworth, and do not pass close in front of the Sandy Hook fortifications for two or three miles, as they must in the present ship channel. The guns of the present fortifications at Sandy Hook would only command Ambrose Channel a short distance, while small vessels could come up Coney Island channel, past Sandy Hook, at a distance of 9 or 10 miles at any time, and shell the city from the inner harbor, if it were not for the fortifications at Fort Wadsworth on Staten Island and these fortifications opposite at Fort Hamilton. In the opinion of the War Department these fortifications on opposite shores of the narrow entrance to the upper bay are an absolutely necessary second defense against a hostile fleet coming into the harbor. If these two forts were torn down, as suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut, of course a hostile fleet, some of it, at least, could come into the harbor. There is no question about that. The city could be destroyed by light vessels without any question. If I did not think this appropriation was absolutely necessary, I should not be advocating it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and upon a division (demanded by Mr. Waldo) there were—23 ayes and 34 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for seacoast cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith, and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals,

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that in a series of paragraphs that have last been read, four or five in number, there is this language:

And the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals, $325,000.

Coupled with the provision of the purchase and test of ammunition there is also in each of these paragraphs a provision for the manufacture, or for the purpose of at least purchasing machinery for manufacture. I desire to inquire of the gentle-man in charge of the bill if it is in contemplation that the Government should enter into the manufacture of the various munitions of war or equipments for war that are provided for in these paragraphs?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, substantially always a portion of these items are let to contract and a portion is ex-pended at the arsenal. The expenditure at the arsenal almost always requires some incidental machinery. There is never carried in the appropriation for the enlargement of the arsenal or new shops or anything that would enable the great expense of the manufacturing project, unless it be specifically given in the bill, and there is nothing of that kind in this bill.

But it is the practice of the Government to buy some pieces, some portions that are partially manufactured, some castings of some other iron shapes, and the like of that, so that it becomes necessary to carry the language both for purchase and manufacture, even if the Government is to in a sense manufacure the completed article in all instances. That is, Government is going to manufacture a siege gun, we will say, certain pieces will be bought that had upon them some work done, so that they might be called manufactured articles as distinguished from pure raw material, and it is necessary to carry this language to enable the Department to carry on this manufacturing enterprise, and they divide the money between the public contracts and the public manufactures, so as to be able to determine what is a fair and reasonable price.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to further ask the gentleman if it would not be possible, should the purpose find favor in the minds of the proper officer, to expend under the peculiar language of these paragraphs a very small sum for the purchase of the article and the balance of each one of these appropriations in the procurement of machinery, so as to lay the fundations for a complete manufacturing establishment at each one of the arsenals of the United States?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I may say that I do not think it would

Mr. HEPBURN. I say, might it not be under the language of this paragraph?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not think it would be. language which has long been used, and it has an interpreta-tion in the Auditor's office as well as in the War Department, and the machinery that is authorized here is, by the language of the bill, an incident to the manufacture of the main article I can not conceive that if a man is authorized to manufacture seacoast cannon and to purchase the machinery necessary to manufacture the seacoast cannon that any of the money could be expended wholly for machinery to manufacture seacoast cannon. In any event, I would say that this has been the language used in this bill without criticism and without objection from as far back as I know anything about fortification bills, and I think is wise language in its practical use and as applied by the Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that it is at all proper for me to criticise the language of gentlemen who are and have been familiar for a long time with the preparation of statutes of appropriations, yet it seems to me that the language used here is the very extreme of looseness. The language is for the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for seacoast cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the I undertake to say that it would be a fair interpretation of that language that would authorize the expenditure of a small amount for the purchase of cannon and ammunition and testing thereof, and a large sum-nine-tenths of it, if you choose-for the purchase of machinery, and that no auditing officer would have a right to interfere with the discretion of the officers of the Government charged with the purchase and procurement of these articles.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. May I ask the gentleman if this lan-guage can possibly be in any wise interpreted except that it is to purchase the machinery to produce the seacoast cannon provided for in this item?

Mr. HEPBURN. I don't know that there is any limitation in this paragraph upon the number of cannon or upon the amount of ammunition that may be purchased, excepting that limitation that it put on those acts by the words "three hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars;" that it would be entirely legitimate to expend $1,000 or, say, $25,000 in purchase and $300,000 for the procurement of machinery, and that it would not be within the authority of the auditing officer to affect in any way that discretion so used by the officer who purchases. The law might put limitations upon the act of the purchasing officer if it saw fit to do so, but instead of that, abdicating its right, it has conferred upon him a discretion as to the amounts that he may use, and while I think that perhaps there is but little doubt or little probability of the abuse of that discretion, yet the discretion is lodged in him and it has extended over items that amount in the aggregate to millions of dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. While the language may for a long time have been used, and may be canonized because of its use, yet I submit that it is loose; that it is not the language of definiteness that ought to be in an appropriation bill, and that it does extend a broad measure of discretion that ought to have proper limitations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes. Mr. FITZGERALD. My understanding is that that language was attached to these particular paragraphs because in the manufacture of these different articles and munitions of war it was found necessary to make some very insignificant repairs to certain machines and to make certain inexpensive tools. Last session, when I was first a member of the committee, the same objection the gentleman raises appealed to me, and the explanation of the method of disbursement under it satisfied me that while the language was not the best that perhaps might be devised, the method in which it had been worked out had accomplished a desirable result.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am not at all satisfied that the results of the exercise of the power of these officers have at all times been satisfactory. The results are not always satisfac-tory. I am led to make that remark by certain matters which were developed yesterday in this committee. Yesterday I put the query to the gentleman in charge of the bill with reference to the powder manufacturers, and it was developed during that discussion that two naval officers, educated by the Government and in the employ of the Government, had been detailed to a certain scientific investigation. That investigation was a part of their employment and as a recognized duty was undertaken by them. They made such progress with it through their employment and with the material of the Government at the arsenals of the Government, with the aid of the employees of the Government, that a discovery valuable to the United States resulted, namely, the method of the manufacture of smokeless These gentlemen, furnished with these opportunities, with these facilities, charged with these duties, took advantage of the knowledge which they had acquired, the employment they had, to patent these discoveries and then sold the patents to other parties. The gentleman says that the rights of the United States were reserved and were carefully protected. far as my investigation goes and so far as my knowledge goes, the rights of the Government were protected to the extent that the Navy Department made use of these patented discoveries

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of lowa. The gentleman, I think, scarcely means to state that I said the rights of the Government were reserved

Mr. HEPBURN. I think that was the emphatic language of the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The Record will show I used no such

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well, I may be mistaken, but that is as I understood the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I did not so intend to be understood.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood him to say by reservation ample in character in the deeds of transfer the rights of the Government of the United States had been amply protected; but, waiving that, I will submit that I am in error if the gentleman insists, but I insist that the rights of the Government in the instance I have adverted to are not protected, but merely reserve to the Navy Department of the Government of the United States the right to employ or make smokeless powder. My information is that the assignees of the rights of these officers of the United States have engaged extensively in the manufacture of powder; that they have engaged in combinations whereby the price of powder has been wonderfully augmented and the Government of the United States has but two alternatives-to engage in the manufacture themselves or to submit to the extortion of those who are using these inventions that, in my humble judgment, belong solely to the United States. But not only that, the information that I have is that the present owners of these rights have now contracts with other govern-ments to furnish smokeless powder to them, and while it is difficult for the United States to obtain it the possible future enemies of the United States are being supplied with it. In other words, we have educated men, detailed men, paid men, furnished men with facilities for making this invention, and then have permitted those men to sell to the possible enemies of the United States, and it may be-such a thing is not impossiblethat should war occur with certain European powers we would find that we have put into their hands the power that would come to them from the uses of this invention.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may finish his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair

Mr. HEPBURN. I certainly thank the committee. I submit,

Mr. Chairman, in view of this possible condition, that the language of the gentleman from Iowa, which I will quote, was not happily selected on yesterday. He said:

And so patents upon smokeless powder were granted to these officers of the United States and the right to produce in unlimited quantities vested in the Government of the United States without the payment of any royalty whatever. If some American powder manufacturer wants to manufacture this smokeless powder for sale to any power on earth outside of the United States Government, I for one am willing that that power shall pay a royalty for the genius of that American officer in inventing the device or the powder.

I submit, sir, that we are not compensated, should a condition of war exist and we be confronted with an adversary armed with this material that we have made possible by the reflection that American genius is being so much benefited. [Applause.] We would not be compensated by the fact that foreign traders are compelled to pay a royalty to an American citizen. That is not the question here. The question is whether or not these gentlemen that are charged with the expenditure of this money, gentlemen who are charged with the execution of this law, in view of what has occurred in connection with this matter, have shown that they are the proper persons to be invested with the large responsibility and the large discretion which this faulty language of the bill vests them with. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I stated, as I understood it, the rights of the United States Government that were granted by license. I did not attempt at that time to even define the rights of the United States outside of the license; I did not say that the rights of the United States were amply or in any other degree protected, but stated the facts as they were. It is not claimed that this process is a secret process betrayed to foreign powers. It is claimed that it is a patented process.

Now, I reiterate what I then said, that if foreign powers are to buy this powder I have no objection to their paying an excessive price for it, and that is all I said yesterday upon that

Now, in order that there may be no possible room for differences as to the facts I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Allen, the Commissioner of Patents, together with the two certificates and the exhibits attached thereto inclosed in said letter, being the two licenses to the Navy Department to manufacture, the one, colloid explosive, and the other, smokeless powder.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent to print in the Record certain documents which he has indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE, Washington, D. C., March 9, 1906.

Hon. James A. Tawney.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Tawney: I send you herewith certified copies of two licenses from John B. Bernadou to the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy Department of the United States to manufacture under Letters Patent Nos. 652455 and 673377, dated December 22, 1902, and referred to by you in your telephonic message this morning.

I remain, yours, very truly,

F. I. Allen. Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE. To all persons to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

To all persons to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

This is to certify that the annexed is a true copy from the records of this Office of an instrument of writing executed by John B. Bernadou December 22, 1902, and recorded December 30, 1902, in Liber H-66, page 337. Said record has been carefully compared with the original and is a correct transcript of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Patent Office to be affixed at the city of Washington this 9th day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and six and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirtieth.

In presence of— HARRY W. SMITH. F. M. LANIGAN. Recorded December 30, 1902.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask a question. Are those two patents the patents under which the Du Pont Powder Company are manufacturing powder?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I understand that these are two patents, among others, on which the Du Pont company is manufacturing powder. I understand that the formula for the smoke-less powder for the Army is not quite identical with the powder covered by these patents; but it is probable that these patents would entitle a party at least to a royalty on the powder used in the Navy and perhaps on the powder used in the Army, in the absence of some right of the Government by license or otherwise.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can the gentleman tell whether Mr. Waddell, of Illinois, manufacturer of powder, is manufacturing under these two patents?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think not; but I am not certain about

Mr. GRAFF. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gaines] that Mr. Waddell only manufactures black powder, and that he formerly worked for the Du Pont company.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand that he did.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gextleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like unanimous consent to take just a moment upon this subject in order to suggest

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there has been no suggestion from any source that we should build any more of these powder factories than we are at present. The gentleman complains, apparently—and I do not want to use the word "com-plain" if that is not satisfactory to him—that we ought not to authorize the use of this money for machinery, whereas the very object in authorizing its use for machinery is to enable the Government to manufacture the respective articles named if it finds it can do it cheaper than it can buy them in the open

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, since my last colloquy with my friend from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] I have been handed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLINE] a letter touching on this question. I will ask that the Clerk please read it for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee renews his motion to strike out the last word. Without objection, the letter will be read in the gentleman's time.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

KEYSTONE POWDER MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Emporium, Pa., January 14, 1907.

Hon. MARCUS C. L. KLINE, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Hon. Marcus C. L. Kline, M. C.,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your esteemed favor of the 12th instant, and note what you say in regard to the distribution of the contract for smokeless powder for the use of the United States Army and Navy among different competitors, and for your information would say that there are no competitors in this business, as the only people who manufacture smokeless powder in this country are the E. I. Du Pont Company, Wilmington, Del. It is, of course, true that bids will be submitted under half a dozen different names, but for your information would say that these names are simply titles of concerns incorporated in the E. I. Du Pont Company and any bid you might receive for smokeless powder will go direct to Wilmington, Del., so that you will see there is no competition whatever.

I am not sufficiently familiar with the cost of a plant for the manufacture of smokeless powder, but I know it is an expensive proposition. So far as I am able to judge, I should think an appropriation of $3,000,000 for that purpose to be money well spent, as the history of this country just prior to the war with Spain fully shows, and I have no doubt but you are familiar with the conditions existing at that time, when, as you well know, the Government had to delay operations until they received a limited supply of smokeless powder from foreign countries, and also that the Army and Navy were both badly handicapped by having to use black powder as against the smokeless powder used by the Spaniards.

This is a matter of record, which you can easily ascertain from the files in Washington.

Yours, truly,

Keystone Powder Manufacturing Company.

A. C. Bluxi, Secretary.

KEYSTONE POWDER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. A. C. Blum, Secretary.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, just one observation. The point I make it this, gentlemen: This smokeless-powder patent belongs to the Government of the United States. It was patented by Professor Munroe and turned over to the Government of the United States as its property, because he discovered it in line of duty and when he was working for the Government of the United States as an officer. Now it has gotten out of the hands of the Government of the United States, or its exclusive power, and has gone into the hands of this powder monopoly that we are trying to control by making appropriation in this or some other bill to build a smokeless-powder factory and make our own powder. Why not withdraw our property, if it is our property, from any and everybody, if we please, and thus save the expense of building a smokeless-powder factory, or control those who use this patent, and thus save money? If it is the Government's property, let the Government take charge of it and control those who use it. If it is Du Pont's property, let Du Pont have it. That is the point about it, and that is why I have addressed myself to the subject here to-day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to strike out the last word. I do so simply to refer very briefly to one criticism made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] as to the language used in several items of this bill. Criticism was made of the use of the words "and the machinery necessary for the manufacture" of certain munitions of war "at the arsenal." It appeared, Mr. Chairman, in the examination of this bill last year by a subcommittee that this language did confer upon certain officials in the War Department a discretion that appeared to me then as unwise. The Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, however, explained the purposes to which the expenditure of this money were put in so satisfactory a manner that the committee was unanimous in the belief that it was not only wise but necessary to have such language in the bill.

I am one of those who believe that the purposes for which appropriations are made should be as specifically stated as language can make them; and yet it was found that in the manufacture of certain implements of war in the arsenals it would be necessary from time to time to manufacture certain instruments, not of a very expensive character, but of a very essential nature in the manufacture of these guns, and unless this particular language was incorporated in each of these provisions there were no funds available for the acquisition of these instruments, and the entire appropriation would be unavailable for any purpose whatever.

That there is little danger that the discretion reposed in these officials will ever be abused is apparent when it is stated that the purpose for which each appropriation carried in the bill is asked was specifically explained by the chiefs of the different bureaus when the bill was under consideration. So that while I agree with the gentleman from Jowa that so far as possible the specific purpose for which the appropriation is made should be plain in these bills, yet there are some items in the bills where we have been unable to find anyone who could suggest language that would accomplish what Congress desires in these appropriations and use language not identical with the language they contain.

I simply state these facts so that Members will know that the committee in preparing this bill had this very objection in mind, and that a criticism that at first sight might be made legitimately to this language does not in fact exist.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

FORTIFICATIONS IN INSULAR POSSESSIONS.

For construction of seacoast batteries in the Hawaiian and Philip-ne islands, $600,000.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in line 23, page 6, by inserting after the word "islands" in that line the words "one million."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 23, after the word "islands" insert "one million," so as read "one million six hundred thousand dollars.".

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not make any further extended remarks in support of this amendment. It is in the line of what I have already said. If this amendment is put in the bill it will provide an appropriation of $1,600,000 for seacoast batteries in Hawaii and the Philippine Islands, which is little more than two-thirds of the amount recommended and estimated for immediate use, or rather to be expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908. The recommendation of the War Department for purposes of seacoast batteries in the Hawaiian and the Philippine islands, to be expended in the fiscal year thus ending, is $2,303,000, I believe. So that if my amendment should carry the bill would then provide a little more than two-thirds of the amount believed to be requisite and absolutely necessary for the purpose of seacoast batteries in the Hawaiian and Philippine islands.

It is not enough. I do not like even to be classed with those who want to get along with a small per cent of the absolutely necessary appropriation; but with the hope and belief that if this amendment is adopted the War Department will be able, with $1,600,000, to adopt some plan, now impossible, by which it can put in some really effective fortifications at Pearl Harbor and Honolulu, in Hawaii, and at Manila, in the Philippine Islands. I thought that the House might be willing, if it is willing to do anything, to make this concession to the wishes of the President of the United States and the Secretary of War, and to the recommendations of the distinguished officers of the Army and Navy and the Taft Board, composed of Secretary Taft and expert, highly educated, trained, and experienced officers of the Army and Navy. Therefore, I offer the amendment just read.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The gentleman has not called the attention of the House to the fact that the items in this bill should be balanced. Seacoast batteries simply mean emplacements. We have balanced $600,000 in the bill with the amount allowed for guns in the insular possessions, and if one item be changed without a corresponding change in the other, it throws the entire bill out of So that if this is the only amendment he means to offer the amount would be out of balance with the amount allowed for guns, and if not, he is asking for a very much larger increase than is suggested by the single amendment. Now, we have given the insular possessions $600,000 more than last year, more than $600,000 in excess of what they got the year before, and more than they ever got in the history of the insular possessions.

I want to present this one thought in addition, and that is that where we fortify a city we have several forts, and more than one battery to a single fort. So when we appropriate the money, as we are doing, a part at a time, it does not mean a fragmentary construction, but it means the establishment complete of a fort, or of a given number of batteries, just as effective as they will ever be.

I ask that this amendment be voted down.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I just desire to say a word in reply, if I may be allowed. It is not accurate for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] to say that we have appropriated this year $600,000 more than last year, and I think he does not mean to make that statement. Last year we attempted to appropriate for Hawaii and the Philippines $260,000 for coast defenses and this year $600,000. Something was said about the $260,000 not being expended. That brings me to say that it was almost impossible to expend it at all, because there was no adequate sum that could be applied in any way, or for any useful purpose, and so it was not expended anywhere. The appropriation last year, as agreed upon in the conference committee on the fortifications bill, was intended to be $260,000 for Hawaii and the Philippines; but here came in one of those unfortunate things about the enrollment, and it appeared in the law as an appropriation of $260,000 for the Hawaiian Islands alone. I am informed that that has not been expended, for the reason that they have no sites or places, and that they have no plan or purpose to which they could apply it without wasting it, the amount being so small.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. GRAFF. Is it not true that $260,000 was all that was asked for the Hawaiian Islands last year?

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no; I think not. Mr. GRAFF. That was all that was asked for that purpose. Mr. KEIFER. We wanted a larger amount, and my recollection is that we had in our bill a larger sum, but in the committee of conference we agreed upon $260,000 to be used in the Hawaiian and Philippine islands; but it turned out, with the law as it is now, that that applied only to the Hawaiian Islands, I think that now, if we have an appropriation of $1,600,000, the War Department can proceed, adopt a definite plan, and in the fiscal year to come can have some sort of real, substantial fortifications at Manila and at Pearl Harbor and Honolulu.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I do so in order to ask the gentleman from Ohio a ques-Is the gentleman's amendment, asking for the increase, based upon the plan of the Taft Board for the fortification of certain places in the insular possessions?

Mr. KEIFER. It is based upon the plan of the War Department, and that, in general, is based upon the plan of the Taft Board, as I understand it. But my proposition is that we shall have this amount of money available in the War Department to make some defense or defenses in the Hawaiian Islands and at Manila that will give us at least naval stations well pro-

Mr. SULLIVAN. Do I understand that this is in part execution of the plan of the Taft Board, which will require the expenditure ultimately of some $11,000,000 for fortifications at Manila, Subig Bay, Pearl Harbor, and Guantanamo?

The recommendation and estimate of the War Department for the purpose of seacoast defenses to be expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, was $2,303,000. sume that the Department had a plan in view by which it was to accomplish something, but under the piecemeal appropriation we are now adopting we are to do nothing potential.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I assume that the War Department has some definite plan for fortification of these specified places in the insular possessions, that they are not proceeding in any haphazard way, and that the Taft Board has framed a plan which in its execution will require the expenditure of about $11,000,000. Now, is it in pursuance of that plan that the gentleman from Ohio offered his amendment for an increase?

Mr. KEIFER. I am unable to say that there is any specific plan except that this amount of money will, I hope, give the Department enough money to adopt an effective plan, and I assume that it is working on the lines of the Taft Board recommendation, which is that there shall be an immediate, effectual fortification of Pearl Harbor and Honolulu and Manila Bay.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I understand, then, the gentleman's purpose is to get Congress to hurry in the execution of this plan and to proceed faster than the committee has recommended?

Mr. KEIFER. Undoubtedly that is the object of the War Department, to proceed so that at a very early day, or as early as practicable, we may have some defenses there where we have not now

Mr. SULLIVAN. One further question. The gentleman is undoubtedly familiar with the attitude of the War Department; for some time we have been trying to get some definite statement of the policy of this Administration with respect to the future control of the Philippine Islands. I would ask whether the plan of the Taft Board, requiring the expenditure of $11,000,000, is based upon the idea of the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands by the Government of the United States:

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to answer, if I may, that this plan is not necessarily based upon the idea that we shall retain them, but is based upon the idea that so long as we do retain them no nation in the world shall come and take them away from us. [Applause.]

Mr. SULLIVAN. But is the plan of the Taft Board requiring the expenditure of the money which will complete the fortifications based upon the permanent retention of the islands?

Mr. KEIFER. It is a sufficient answer to say that the plan of defense of the Taft Board proceeded upon the idea that we shall not be in the naked condition there that we now are, and have our sovereignty taken from us by the first comer.

Mr. SULLIVAN. It seems to me we ought to find out or get some expression of the policy of this Administration with respect to the duration of our control of the Philippine Islands. If the Taft Board contemplates a complete plan of fortifica-tions, and I understand it does, it would be manifest folly to execute that plan if it is the policy of the Government to abandon the islands in the near future. It would be a waste of money to fortify islands that we intended to surrender. Therefore it seems to me that it would be economy on the part of the Government, and it would give the people of the country some intelligent idea of what its policy is, if we can get an expression by some one who is in the secrets of the Administration as to the Administration's purpose, and I thought the gentle-man's familiarity with the War Department would enable him

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I am not in the secrets of the Administration or of the War Department, but I do know that the War Department stands for the flag of this country wherever it floats and is going to stand for it until the end comes, not that we shall abandon these possessions that have come to us at so much cost, but that we shall make disposition of them if we wish, or retain them through all time. The fact about it is that when we acquired the Philippine Islands we paid $20,000,000 in cash toward their purchase, as well as paying the expense of the Spanish war, and if we should conclude to sell them to some power or surrender them to an independent gov-ernment, including the Philippine Islands, then we could make terms for our permanent expense in fortifying them and preserving them, and if the gentleman wants to look further as to the wishes of the War Department, of the President, and various persons in authority, I will call his attention to what he will find in the Record of to-morrow's proceedings in the way of extracts from messages and reports, and so forth.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Can not the gentleman briefly tell me whether I will find in that RECORD he mentions any definite expression of the policy of this Government with respect to the islands and their future control?

Mr. KEIFER. This much the gentleman from Massachusetts will find, in all of the messages and recommendations of the President, in all of the reports of the Secretary of War, and in the reports of the boards, that the policy is to defend them and to protect them, and to have defenses built up there so that we can safely do it, and if from that he can draw any inference he will find it all in the RECORD day after to-morrow morning

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I have never been able to draw any inference satisfactory to myself concerning the policy of this Administration with respect to the control of these islands. We have never received any definite information. The nearest approach to definiteness has been the statement that when the people of the Philippine Islands have acquired sufficient intelligence to appreciate the beneficent purpose of the United States Government then they might be trusted with some small measure of local government and, having shown some capacity to administer their local affairs, might eventually be granted from time to time larger shares in the administration of the government of the whole islands. That is the nearest approach to a definite statement that I have read yet, and I think that perhaps the gentleman, out of his abundant and, I think, definite information, might be able to tell us in a more definite way than we have been told yet just what the purpose of the Administration is with respect to these islands. If the gentleman is going to justify the appropriations made from year to year as part of a plan which will require some eleven or twelve millions of dollars to execute upon the theory that we are simply improving these islands, and that we will make some purchaser later on pay the cost of these improvements, I shall have to rest content with that explanation; but if he has any more information, I should like to have the House get the benefit of it.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I only want to say that if the gentleman from Massachusetts can tell what the disposition of the Congress of the United States is, then he will get nearer to knowing what will be the ultimate disposition of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Well, judging from the expressions I have heard privately in the House, not always publicly, I think most of the Members would not be sorry if the Philippine Islands disappeared beneath the surface of the ocean to-morrow morning, for then the United States would be relieved of the necessity of fortifying and governing them. The islands have ceased to be commercially valuable. No one questions or can question the accuracy of that statement, and I do not think any statesman in America to-day will point out any reason for retaining them any longer, except this one, namely, that if we should abandon them upon the theory that their government is a nuisance to the United States Government, some other power might take them and thus acquire possession of the nuisance. That does not seem to me to be a sufficient reason for retaining them. Some one has said that if they are not sufficiently fortified some foreign power may take them. I think it would be the best thing that could happen to the people of the United States if some foreign power did take them, for then we should be relieved of the responsibility of paying these extravagant bills for their government and their defense. It has already been pointed out in a very able magazine article by a Republican Member from the State of Massachusetts that all our occupation of the islands has meant to us up to date is this: That they give an exceptional advantage to any foreign power which may engage us in war; thus if Japan should go to war with the United States she would strike immediately at the Philippine Islands and compel us, in order to save the national honor, to concentrate our fleet in the Pacific Ocean, near the coast of the Philippine Islands, drawing that fleet away from the whole west coast of the United States, compelling us to wage a war far from our coal supplies and our supplies of food, and other munitions of war, placing us at a tremendous disadvantage and losing us the benefit of the great stretch of ocean which, up to the time of our acquisition of the Philippine Islands, would have given us a tremendous advantage in a contest with that rising oriental power. Now, then, it seems that our retention of the Philippine Islands simply affords us an opportunity to waste money in time of peace and squander it in time of war. Neither of those seems a sufficient reason for retaining them, and therefore I say it would be a good thing if somebody would take them away from us some dark night. The CHAIRMAN.

The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts be allowed five minutes' additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to object, but I want a vote on this at a very early moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Perkins]

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow this inquiry, and I will not interrupt him any more? I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to say his information from conversations with Members here was that a majority of the House was in favor of abandoning these islands, and I would like to inquire whether he or any Member of this House has ever offered a joint resolution or a bill of any kind looking to the abandonment of those islands?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Oh, no; no member of the majority would dare to vote for that proposition. I think if we could take a secret ballot we would drop the islands by an almost unanimous vote. Of course no member of the minority would waste his time on a losing legislative proposition. The minority is power-less to effect these changes in the law, so no one of the minority has attempted that.

Mr. PERKINS. The only question I was going to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts was in line of the remarks he just made, whether he thinks, as bearing upon this question of the necessity of fortification, that, considering our own experience in the Philippines, the amount of money we have spent, and the small return we have received, it is conceivable that any government could wish to go to work in order to take them away from us?

Mr. SULLIVAN. No; I do not think that any government would wage war against the United States with the Philippine Islands as the stake in the contest, but if Japan should engage in war with the United States she would strike at the Philippine Islands at once and compel the United States to send the Navy there to defend them. National honor would compel that course. [Cries of " Vote!"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment to come in immediately after line 23 on page 6 of

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, after line 23, insert the following: "For the procurement of a site or sites in the Hawaiian Islands for forts and seacoast batteries, $100,000."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order upon that amendment. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Mann, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 23821—the fortifications bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the following committee appointment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Chair announces the appointment of Representative Sherley, of Kentucky, a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, vice Representative Little, resigned.

JOHN INGRAM.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives (the Scnate concurring therein) of the 11th instant, I return herewith House bill No. 18214, entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to John Ingram."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 15, 1907.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 502) for the relief of James A. Russell, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I present a memorial adopted by the constitutional convention of the proposed State of Oklahoma, concerning the removal of restrictions upon Indian lands. I ask that the memorial be read and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as follows:

Memorial by the constitutional convention of the proposed State of Oklahoma concerning removal of restrictions upon Indian lands, in-troduced by Hon. O. P. Brewer, district 77, on the 8th day of Janu-ary, A. D. 1907, and adopted by unanimous vote of the convention. CERTIFICATE.

I hereby certify that the within memorial was introduced and passed by the constitutional convention on the date and in the manner above stated. MEMORIAL.

JNO. M. YOUNG, Secretary.

MEMORIAL.

To the President of the United States and to the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the representative delegates of the people of Oklahoma and Indian Territory in constitutional convention assembled, respectfully request that the restrictions imposed upon the sale and lease of lands allotted to and held by citizens of the United States in the proposed State of Oklahoma, whether of Indian blood or not, full-blood homesteads excepted, be removed without delay, as a necessary means to the development of our State and the development and welfare of our citizens of Indian blood.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I present a memorial adopted by the constitutional convention of the proposed State of Oklahoma, relative to forest reserve in the Indian Territory. that the memorial be read and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as follows:

Memorial by the constitutional convention of the proposed State of Oklahoma, relating to forest reserve in the Indian Territory, introduced by Hon. Gabe E. Parker, district 109, on the 10th day of January, A. D. 1907, and referred to committee on coal, oil, gas, and lumber lands. Reported favorably by committee on the 11th day of January, A. D. 1907, and adopted by unanimous vote.

CERTIFICATE.

I hereby certify that the within memorial was introduced and passed by the constitutional convention on the date and in the manner above stated.

JNO. M. YOUNG, Secretary.

MEMORIAL.

To the President of the United States, and to the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the representatives and delegates of the people of Oklahoma, in constitutional convention assembled, respectfully request that the order of the honorable Secretary of the Interior, setting aside a forest reserve in the eastern portion of the proposed State of Oklahoma, be set aside and not confirmed. Such reserve would be injurious to the welfare of this State and would be harmful to those citizens of the United States who are the owners of this entire property.

WM. H. Murray, President.

THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask leave to submit a partial report from the select committee appointed to investigate affairs connected with the Five Civilized Tribes. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD; that the report and the testimony be printed as one publication, and that the report be printed separately, and that report and testimony be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Inasmuch as the committee has not yet arrived at a conclusion as to some matters, I ask that it may be permitted later to report further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, such permission is granted, and the report and accompanying testimony will be printed as desired.

The report is as follows:

is granted, and the report and accompanying testimony will be printed as desired.

The report is as follows:

The select committee appointed under the provisions of Senate resolution of June 30, 1906, to investigate all matters connected with the control of June 30, 1906, to investigate all matters connected with the control of June 30, 1906, to investigate all matters connected with the cate entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes" and kindred matters in said Territory, begs leave to submit the following partial report:

On June 30, 1906, the Senate of the United States authorized the senate resolution as follows:

"Resolved, That a select committee, consisting of five Senators, under a sponing to fully investigate all matters connected with the condition of affairs in the Indian Territory in relation to legislation included in of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1906, and kindred matters in said Territory with reference to the Five Civilized Tribes, and that said committee be authorized to employ a stenographer to report its hearings and all necessary of Washington and in the Indian Territory or elsewhere, as circumstances may demand, with power to send for persons and papers and to administer oats, and shall make full and complete report, to gether with their conclusions and recommendations, to the Senate of mecessary expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the control may be administer oats, and shall make full and complete report, to gether with their conclusions and recommendations, to the Senate of mecessary expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the continuent of the Senate."

Under said resolution the President of the Senate appointed said committee, as follows: Senator C. D. Clark, Wyoning, chairman; connecticut; Senator H. M. Tellers, Colorado; Senator W. A. Clark, Montan.

The committee organized at Denver, Colo., on August 10, 1906, and on November 12, 1906, met a

THE SEGREGATED COAL AND ASPHALT LANDS.

By act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, it was provided, among other things, that the Secretary of the Interior should cause to be segregated coal and asphalt lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations not to exceed in extent 500,000 acres, the same to be sold for cash under terms and conditions as provided in said act. Proceeding under the provisions of that law the Secretary of the Interior caused thus to be segregated from allotment 444,983 acres, and duly caused the improvements upon the surface of said lands to be appraised. Included within this segregation were lands under lease to different persons and corporations to the extent of 100,280 acres, each of said leases having an unexpired term of twenty years and upward to run. Under the provisions of said act of Congress the Secretary of the Interior caused full information to be published and offered said segregated lands for sale in the year 1904. None of the bids received, however, for one or more tracts was acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior, and none was accepted.

By said act of July 1, 1902, the authority to lease any of the unleased lands within said segregation was withdrawn, and under the act of April 26, 1906, it was provided that all said lands, whether leased or unleased, should be reserved from sale until the existing leases for coal and asphalt lands should have expired or until such time as might be otherwise provided by law. Under these several acts of Congress, therefore, this land stands segregated from allotment, but no authority in the Secretary of the Interior or elsewhere to make new leases or to sell the said coal land without a further act of Congress is given.

The present revenue, under leases now in operation, which is used for school purposes by the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, amounts to about $250,000 per annum upon a royalty of 8 cents per ton, mine run. The committee, in its investigation, sought diligently, by personal observation and by soliciting information, both from interested and disinterested sources, to ascertain the value of these lands. Special attention was paid this inquiry because of exaggerated views that have found expression in regard not only to the value of the land per acre, but to the extent and quality of the actual producing coal lands included in said segregation. There will be found in exhibits attached to this report estimates placed upon the land from experts connected with the operation of certain portions of the land under lease, from the United States inspector of mines for Indian Territory, from the Director of the United States Geological Survey, and others connected with that Bureau, from the Secretary of the Interior, himself an owner and operator of large tracts of coal lands, and from many others well informed on the subject; and from all the evidence and statements thus submitted, while the committee is unable to arrive at a definite price per acre which might be considered the fair value of all the land, it may be reasonably said that the entire value of the said segregation per acre, for the mineral rights alone, and the necessary surface for outside workings may be s near future.

The best evidence obtainable shows that a considerable portion of the surface of the segregated lands is suitable for agricultural purposes and at a fair valuation worth from $10 to $15 per acre.

Two ways have been submitted for the disposal of the lands:
First. An outright sale under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to the highest bidder, in such tracts as the bidder may desire.

Second. The sale of the surface of said land, reserving the mineral rights thereto, to individual settlers in small tracts for farming purposes, and the sale of the mineral rights in such tracts and under such terms and conditions as might be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

rights thereto, to individual settlers in small tracts for farming purposes, and the sale of the mineral rights in such tracts and under such terms and conditions as might be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

It is the insistent opinion of the authorities of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, and of the great majority of the Indians themselves, having interests in common in said tract, that the lands should be disposed of in such a manner as to bring the greatest possible price, and at an early date, and the opinion of the nations themselves seems to be that this purpose could be best accomplished by sale outright of the surface and mineral rights without separation and in one transaction. The committee is not of opinion, however, that this course would result in obtaining the greatest price or would be for the ultimate best interests either of the tribes or of the individual members thereof or for the general public good.

In the vicinity of these lands and in many cases upon the lands are towns of considerable importance, and it is clearly apparent that the surface of the segregation, much of which is first-class farming land, should, as early as is possible, pass into individual ownership. The interests of the Indians, the necessities of the new State, and many other considerations seem to demand that this be done; but as to the mineral rights the same necessity does not exist. Indeed, in the judgment of the committee, the time is not now propitious for a final decision as to the disposition of these mineral rights. A fair income is now being derived from present leasing operation, and except for the advisability of closing up as early as practicable the community affairs of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, no necessity exists for action in the near future as to the disposal of these lands, so far as the mineral rights are concerned.

It has been presented to the committee that there has been appointed by the State of Oklahoma, within whose boundaries the lands will fall, and that such committee

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS.

By the act of March 3, 1901, all Indians in Indian Territory were made citizens of the United States. The Indian tribes had title to these lands by patents from the United States. These lands were occupied in common by the members of the respective tribes. By the supplemental agreements made in 1902, these Indians agreed to take their lands in severalty upon condition that they could alienate their allotments within a certain period, which differed in the several tribes. We believe that Congress might shorten this period and permit alienation at an earlier date.

Congress by the act of April 21, 1904, removed the restrictions upon the alienation of all allottees of either of the Five Civilized Tribes who were not of Indian blood, except minors and except as to homesteads, and provided that restrictions upon the alienation of all other allottees, except minors and except as to homesteads, might, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, be removed upon application to the Indian agent at the Union agency.

Section 19 of the act of April 26, 1906, provides that no full-blood Indian of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole tribes should have power to allenate, sell, dispose of, or encumber in any manner any of the lands allotted to him for a period of twenty-five years from and after the approval of that act, unless such restrictions, prior to the expiration of said period, shall be removed by act of Congress.

We believe that this last legislation was unwise, injurious to the Indians, and of no validity. Congress after providing in the supplemental agreements that all the lands allotted to the citizens of the different tribes should be alienable within certain periods could not, without the consent of the Indians, extend the time in which the lands could not be alienated and add to the restrictions imposed by the original agreements. The effect of this legislation has already clouded, and if unrepealed, will continue to cloud the title of much land in Indian Territory and will result in endless litigation.

It will prevent the Indians from obtaining a fair price for their lands and has been, and will continue to be, a fruitful source of dishonest transactions. It will not prevent sales being made at the expiration of the periods designated in the supplemental agreements, and has already resulted in contracts being made for such sales. This provision is generally considered to be invalid and should be repealed.

We recommend that all restrictions be removed from tesurplus lands of all citizens of the Five Civilized Tribes, except minors.

We recommend the removal of restrictions as to homesteads of the members of such tribes who are not of Indian blood, which includes intermarried white citizens and freedmen.

The removal of restrictions on the alienation should also include the removal of restrictions as to encumbering and leasing.

We believe that the restrictions should remain upon the homesteads of citizens of Indian blood, which would include both full bloods and mixed bloods. This will insure each member of every family a home that can be improved from the funds derived from the sale of his surplus lands. A homestead in Indian Territory is not like a homestead on the public domain where the head of the family only has a homestead. A homestead in Indian Territory consists of from 40 to 160 acres of average land for each member of the tribe and may or may not be his place of residence. A family of six may have hom

OIL AND GAS.

Meetings of the select committee were held to investigate the questions of oil and gas at Vinita, Tuisa, and Bartlesville, where hearings were had and statements made by the many people engaged in these industries as well as by all others who desired to be heard.

The regulation providing a limit of area not to exceed 4.800 acres to any one individual or company governing the oil lands seemed to be generally satisfactory to all parties, except that a party interested in a 4.800-acre tract, even though only to a small extent, is prohibited from having an interest in any other lease. There was a general contention that each party should be entitled to hold in several companies, if so desired, so that he should be entitled to an aggregate holding of 4.800 acres, though said holdings might be distributed in different companies.

The royalty at one-tenth was not complained of and seemed to be tention that each party should be entitled to hold in several compenses, the so desired, so that he should be entitled to an agreezate points of 4,800 acres, though said holdings might be distributed in different companies.

The royalty at one-tenth was not complained of and seemed to be generally satisfactory.

There was universal complaint as to the requirement of the Department for a deposit of $5,000 in bank as a guaranty for each lease, and it is the opinion of your committee that this regulation should be modified or dispensed with where the parties obtaining leases would make a showing of ability to carry out their contracts.

There was also a general demand that leases should be transferable without necessity of securing consent of the Secretary of the Interior, and this would seem to be a reasonable demand, provided always that in no instance should the maximum limit of 4,800 acres to a single holder be exceeded.

It was the consensus of opinion amongst the producers that there should be some local authority in the Territory to pass upon applications for leases, and thereby avoid the long delay which they claim usually occurs in having an application submitted to the authorities at Washington, and if a proper tribunal or agency could be established to carry out this plan, it would seem to be advisable to adopt it.

At present there are only two pipe lines running into the Indian Territory, both belonging to the Frairie Oil and Gas Company, one a 6-inch line and the other an 8-inch line, and the total capacity of the two lines is not all district, where populary From the best information obtainable, the object of the control of the con follows:

"Any permit granted heretofore or under these regulations shall be subject to any changes or amendments in or to these regulations hereafter made by the Secretary of the Interior."
Further provision is made as an "express condition" of the acceptance of a permit or permission to build or operate a pipe line and appurtenances under these regulations that if at any time the Secretary of the Interior shall be satisfied that any of the provisions of these regulations, or of any amendments or changes thereof hereafter established, have been or are being violated, the said Secretary of the Interior, after ten days' notice to the owner or owners of such pipe line of his intention so to do, shall have "authority summarily to suspend, cancel, or revoke" such permission under certain conditions, which are stated. It is doubtful whether any company could be financed under such uncertain conditions, which are subject entirely to the uncontrolled discretion of a Secretary of the Interior.

Your committee approves of stringent regulations to prevent monopolies, but they should be of such a character that they would not work a forfeiture of property without due process of law. We believe that Congress should provide appropriate general regulations with reference to oil and gas leases and the transportation of said commodities in the Indian Territory.

WITHDRAWAL OF LANDS FROM ALLOTMENT.

WITHDRAWAL OF LANDS FROM ALLOTMENT.

Indian Territory.

WITHDRAWAL OF LANDS FROM ALLOTMENT.

Many earnest and insistent protests have been received against the withdrawal from allotment by the Secretary of the Interior of a large body of land in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Cherokee nations. The original withdrawal was of about 4,000,000 acres, and also suspended further action as to perfecting complete individual title to all allotments already made within the area withdrawn. This was subsequently modified by rescinding the order as to allotments already made and by cutting down the area about one-half.

The committee has carefully considered this matter and is of the opinion that the order of withdrawal was without authority of law. The agreement with the tribes and the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, authorized and directed the allotments to be made as soon as practicable, and that law the committee believes can not be set aside, impeded, or modified except by act of Congress repealing or changing the original statute.

The Secretary of the Interior advised your committee that he had made this order of withdrawal upon the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, who contemplated establishing a forest reservation therein if Congress should authorize the purchase by the Government of the land from the Indians for that purpose; but the committee is of opinion that whatever may have been the purpose or object of the Secretary of the Interior, he had no authority under the law to make the order of withdrawal.

The investigation made by the committee has satisfied it that the general situation in the Indian Territory, so far as concerns the relationship between the Government of the United States and the several Indian tribes and the individual members thereof, is such as to demand as speedy action by Congress as may be consistent with the magnitude and multitude of the interests involved.

In view of this fact, the committee submits this partial report, and at an early day, if permitted by the Senate, will submit to the Senate its conclusions

Mr. HEMENWAY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 7897) to reorganize and enlist the members of the United States Naval Academy Band; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions :

A bill (S. 7898) granting a pension to John Bilderback;

A bill (S. 7899) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Reeves; and

A bill (S. 7900) granting an increase of pension to Levi Cain (with accompanying papers).

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 7901) for the relief of Robert T. Cheek; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

· Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 7902) granting a pension to Henry B. Edwards; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill (S. 7903) granting an increase of pension to Catherine De Rossett Meares; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KEAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 84) authorizing the Secretary of Way to divisible condensed express for an ing the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon for an equestrian statue of the late Lieut. Gen. Winfield Scott, U. S. Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SHORTAGE OF CARS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, several days ago I introduced a bill requiring railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce to supply ears promptly for the shipment of live stock, and it was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Hansbrough] suggested that if the committee should take up that subject it ought also to consider the question of interstate shipment of grain. From that suggestion, as well as from others, the bill I introduced has been redrafted, so as to make it applicable to all character of interstate freight. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The bill (S. 7887) to require railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce to promptly furnish cars and other trans-portation facilities and to empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to make rules and regulations with respect thereto, and to further regulate commerce among the several States was read twice by its title.

Mr. KEAN. Do I understand the Senator from Texas to say that that is a substitute for the bill he introduced the other day?

Mr. CULBERSON. It is intended to cover the entire subject. Mr. KEAN. It is a substitute for the bill introduced the other day by the Senator?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes. There being no objection, the bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 7887) to require railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce to promptly furnish cars and other transportation facilities and to empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to make rules and regulations with respect thereto, and to further regulate commerce among the several States.

Mr. MILLARD submitted an amendment providing for a reconsideration and review of applications to be enrolled as members of the Choctaw tribe of Indians, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that any person heretofore identified as a Mississippi Choctaw and who has failed to remove to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country within the period heretofore stipulated for such removal may, within one year hereafter, so remove to the Indian Territory, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DUBOIS submitted an amendment authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and adjudicate the claims of Samuel Garland, deceased, against the Choctaw Nation, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment relative to appropriations for the more complete endowment and maintenance of agricultural colleges now established, or which may hereafter be established, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $600,000 for the balance and final payment due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made February 16, 1903, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the erection of necessary improvements, including cottages, on the lands donated to the Murrow Indian Orphans' Home by the Choctaws and Chickasaws, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment authorizing the payment, out of the existing appropriation for the enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion laws, to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of $1,666.50 for reimbursement of cost of maintenance of alleged native-born Chinese in the years 1903 and 1904, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropria-

AFFAIRS OF THE MEXICAN KICKAPOO INDIANS.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to fully investigate the affairs of the Mexican Kickapoo Indians and all affairs connected therewith, and that said committee be empowered to send for persons and papers and to subporna witnesses and to administer oaths and to sit during the sessions of the Senate; and said committee shall make full and complete report, together with its recommendations, to the Senate. The necessary expenses of said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ROBERT T. CHEEK.

Mr. MONEY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 7901) for the relief of Robert T. Cheek, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the "Tucker Act."

SILAS SILVER. Mr. MONEY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 6336) for the relief of Silas Silver, with all accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the "Tucker Act."

R. H. HOFFMAN. Mr. MONEY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 5617) for the relief of the estate of R. H. Hoffman, with all accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and known as the "Tucker Act."

EXTENSION OF FEDERAL POWERS.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Friday, the 18th, I will ask leave, after the routine morning business, to call up resolution No. 200, in regard to the form of our present Government, as to the rights given to the General Government and the reserved rights of the States, and that I will address the Senate briefly on the subject, if opportunity offers.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 7034) to incorporate the International Sunday School Association of America.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. I heard the bill only imperfectly, and I find no copy of it. I have sent for one. It occurred to me, if I did hear it correctly, that there should be some amendment proposed.

Mr. McCREARY. There are two amendments proposed by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will wait until the amendments have been

Mr. McCREARY. The bill was considered by the Judiciary Committee and favorably reported unanimously.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated in their order.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 4, on page 2, line 21, before the word "provide," to strike out "law" and insert "by-laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 4, line 2, after the word "by-laws," to strike out:

The members of the association may change the principal place of business at any annual meeting or at any special meeting when notice of the proposed change shall be given in the call for such meeting.

Mr. McCREARY. Those words are proposed to be stricken

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand the request is that unanimous consent be given for present consideration.

Mr. McCREARY. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the request. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire before allowing it to be taken up by unanimous consent whether I am correct in my understanding of the bill that it does not require that the principal place of business shall be retained within the jurisdiction of the United States?

Mr. McCREARY. It is applicable only to the District of Co-

Mr. HEYBURN. As I understand it, consent is given to change it to any other part of the world.

Mr. McCREARY. No, sir; that is a mistake.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have the bill read again, so that we may hear it.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, this is simply a corporation in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEYBURN. But it contains a provision that the trustees may change the principal place of business.

Mr. McCREARY. Those are the words expressly eliminated from the bill and are no longer in it-that is, the amendment proposes that they shall be stricken out. They are the words which have just been read at the desk.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the amendment be again read. The Secretary again read the amendment of the committee.

Mr. McCREARY. Those words are to be stricken out.
Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to make just one other inquiry. There is no requirement that a majority of the board of trustees shall be American citizens, as I read it, so that it might pass entirely under the control of those who are not citizens of the United States. It seems to me that that provi-sion, which is common in all such statutes, should be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, this is simply for the purpose of incorporating a Sunday school association of a national character, but limited in its corporate capacity to the District of Columbia. The case supposed by the Senator from Idaho is scarcely one to be considered. When the motive is to incorporate the Sunday school people of the United States, the suggestion that it might pass entirely into the hands of for-eigners, it seems to me, is so remote a possibility as not to be entertained.

Mr. HEYBURN. But I notice in the enumeration of those who are constituted by this act of incorporation there are a number of foreigners by name. I would be far from objecting to a bill having for its object the purposes stated in the bill, but I do not think it is proper to make an incorporation by authority of an act of Congress that shall vest powers in those who are not citizens of the United States and throw no safeguard about it, so that it may at some time be constituted entirely of foreigners.
Mr. McCREARY.

I will say to the Senator from Idaho that the International Sunday School Association of America is now composed of persons in the United States and in Canada.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is claimed to be international; that is to say, they are designated as an international association.

Mr. McCREARY. Yes; and last year the meeting was held in the State of Ohio.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a very worthy purpose, but in incorporating the organization we should provide that a majority of the trustees shall at all times be citizens of the United States.

Mr. McCREARY. I have no objection to an amendment as suggested, that a majority of the trustees shall be citizens of the

Mr. HEYBURN. I think with that amendment there can be no objection to the bill. The objection is only as to the form. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. McCREARY. It will come in at the end of section 4. Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; at the end of section 4 I-move to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That a majority of the board of trustees shall at all times be citizens of the United States.

Mr. McCREARY. As far as I can do so, I accept that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF PROVISIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6578) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1895, and to amend an act amendatory thereof approved June 20, 1906; which was, on page 2, line 3, after "shall," to insert "when sold by weight or measure."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives. The motion was agreed to.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE FOR HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 81) authorizing temporary leaves of absence for homestead settlers; which were, to strike out lines 4 and 5 and insert "North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Minnesota, and Montana;" in line 8, to strike out all after "resolution" down to and including "hereunder," line 14; in line 14, to strike out "such;" and in line 15, after "absence," to insert "under this resolution."

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 23718. An act to authorize the Chicago, Lake Shore and South Bend Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Calumet River in the State of Indiana, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. J. Res. 190. Joint resolution extending protection of second proviso of section 1 of the act of December 21, 1904, to certain entrymen was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

OPENING OF MACOMB STREET NW.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 20069) for the opening of Macomb street NW., District of Columbia. A similar bill has once passed the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TUG FORK OF THE BIG SANDY RIVER.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 19523) to authorize Thomas J. Ewing and George B. Patton, of Catlettsburg, Ky., and Charles Miller, of Huntington, W. Va., to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River. It is a small bill, and it has been on the Calendar for nearly a year.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CARMACK. I simply want to call up the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. SCOTT. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that this is a small bridge bill that has been on the Calendar for nearly a year, and the parties are very anxious to go ahead and build the bridge.

Mr. CARMACK. I will not object to its consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which will be stated.

The Secretary. Resolution No. 208, by Mr. Foraker, directing the Committee on Military Affairs to investigate the Brownsville (Tex.) affray, etc.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I have received the paper which I send to the desk, and I ask to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

House joint resolution No. 7.

House joint resolution No. 7.

(1) Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the fifty-fifth general assembly of the State of Tennessee (the senate concurring), That the course of President Roosevelt in discharging the negro soldiers implicated in the Brownsville, Tex., shooting affair be, and the same is hereby, heartily commended.

(2) Be it further resolved, That our delegation in Congress, both in the Senate and House of Representatives, are respectfully asked to give their support to the President's course in discharging the negro soldiers. Adopted January 10, 1907.

Concurred in by the senate January 11, 1907.

This resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote in both houses.

EDW. B. MARTIN,

Chief Clerk of House of Representatives.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, that resolution was unanimously adopted, being supported by every Democrat and every Republican in both houses of the General Assembly of Tennessee. It will be noted that the resolution requests the Senators from Tennessee, as well as the Members of the other House, to support the action of the President in discharging these soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. It gives me great pleasure to do so, because the sentiment of the resolution is entirely in accord with my own.

I think it proper to say, Mr. President, that any report Senators may have heard that I have been personally solicited to come to the President's rescue in this matter, that the President has personally urged me to forgive and forget certain energetic personal remarks and to throw myself between him and the ferocious assault of the Senator from Ohio, is a gross exagger-I will not say that it is an infamous falsehood, because ation. such language belongs to the vocabulary of Presidential controversy rather than to that of Senatorial debate. Nor is it true, as Senators may have heard, that I have been moved to come to the President's defense because of an infatuated devotion to the man. I have a great admiration for that strong and brave and large-minded gentleman, the Secretary of War. My admiration for the President is more temperate and subdued. In the language of Hamlet, "It waits upon the judgment."

Seriously, Mr. President, I suppose there is no Senator, always with the exception of my friend from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman], who is less likely than I to be suspected of an excessive partiality for our present Chief Executive. The President once said that he would see a certain member of the Tennessee delegation in hades before he would do anything for him, a remark that was entirely gratuitous in view of the fact that the person supposed to have been referred to had never stooped to ask a favor at his hand; but, with supreme indifference to his opinion, had censured him when he was wrong and, with a like indifference to his opinion, can support him when he is right. I care so little for the verbal ebullitions of that remarkable man that I can see what he himself could never see in any man who expressed an opinion contrary to his own-I can see the good as well as the bad in his public conduct, and judge both fairly and impartially.

In this case, Mr. President, it seems to me that the President has acted with a remarkable freedom from impulse, with unusually careful deliberation, and with an anxious effort to do nothing more nor less than complete justice to all concerned. Indeed, Mr. President, I am haunted by the suspicion that the President was the more careful to ascertain the facts and to keep within the limits of the law because he was dealing with negro offenders than he would have been if he had been dealing with white offenders.

Mr. President, if I know my own heart, my judgment of the President's act has not been influenced in the least by any prejudice against the negro. While I have my own views as to the proper place of the negro in the government of this country, I know his virtues—and he is not without virtues—I know his virtues as well as I know his fallings, and no Senator upon the other side of the Chamber can judge his conduct with a broader charity. There is no Senator upon the other side of the Chamber and no man elsewhere who has a profounder pity for his condition, or who more honestly and sincerely wishes him well. I have never given my consent to any policy or course of dealing that did not recognize his rights as a man and which did not require for him exact and even-handed justice under the law. For more than twenty years I have never failed with tongue or pen to make my indignant protest against every act of lawless violence upon the negro, or to demand that he shall have a fair trial under the laws which the white man has made.

When I object to the negro as a governing citizen I do so because it is my profound belief that a government constructed by and for a race with a heritage of a thousand years of freedom can not be wielded by a race whose only preparation has been ages of barbarism modified by centuries of slavery.

It is no purpose of mine, Mr. President, to go into a discussion of the race question, but I can not forbear saying just a word or two in reply to some suggestions which have been made upon the floor of the Senate. My honorable friend the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson] delivered a lecture to southern Senators, in which there were many things said with reason, many things profitable for instruction; but the Senator suggested that if Senators from the South should continue to protest against the fifteenth amendment, should continue to express opinions contrary to the wisdom of the enfranchisement of the negro, we should lose all the friends we had not already lost among the Democrats of the North. Mr. President, the fifteenth amendment was imposed upon the southern people at a time when their lips were sealed and when their hands were tied. It is asking too much of us to demand that we shall remain dumb and silent forever in the presence of an issue so full of peril not only to the people of the South, but to this entire Republic. If, for expressing our sentiments upon that question, we are to pay the penalty of losing the few remaining friends we have among northern Democrats, I have only to say, Mr. President, that, so far as I am concerned, I am not willing to retain their friendship at the price of our own freedom and of our right to speak our honest thought. The time has passed when the Southern people must speak with bated breath and whispered humbleness as a condition of their right to speak at all. are freeborn and the sons of freemen.

But, Mr. President, I believe that the negro has suffered most from the action of his false or misguided friends in the North, and that no better illustration of that fact has appeared than in the violent and passionate protest that has been made against the just and proper and necessary action of the President in this

Mr. President, the only complaint that can justly be made against the President with reference to the negro race is that he has loved the negro "not wisely, but too well." There is something to my mind infinitely pathetic in the plaintive recital which the President makes in his message of the many acts of friendship, of the many efforts he has made in behalf of the negro race; yet there is not to-day in all this country a man who is more universally or more bitterly hated by the negroes of this country than is the man who abolished the Indianola post-office and dined with Booker Washington. [Laughter.] All that he has done, all that he has attempted in behalf of the negro race has been utterly forgotten simply because he could not manifest that sympathy with the criminal negro, which pervades the negro population of this country from one end of it to the other.

I think that it is a most unfortunate thing that this agitation should have been brought about. I think it is the most unfortunate thing that has occurred, so far as the negro is concerned, It is my deliberate judgment, Mr. President, in many years. that if the soldiers who committed that outrage at Brownsville had been white soldiers, instead of negro soldiers, and especially if they had been white soldiers who had fired into the houses of negro citizens, neither the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] nor any other Senator would have ever lifted his voice in protest against it. Whatever distinction Senators may draw, to the negroes of this country this agitation appears, not as a demand for justice, but as a justification of crime. Senators may say for justice, but as a justification of crime. Senators may say that there is no proof; they may say, as the Senator from Ohio has said, that the evidence against these negro soldiers is flimsy; they may deny that they actually committed this crime; but that is not the voice of the negroes throughout this country. They confess the act; they justify it; they glory in it. read, Mr. President, an extract from resolutions adopted by a great mass meeting of negro citizens in the city of Boston. Speaking of what occurred in the town of Brownsville, they say:

Brooding on repeated insults and outrages, a few of these colored soldiers went into the town on the night of August 13 last with their guns, determined to do for themselves what the uniform of their country could not do for them and what the police power of white Brownsville would not do for them, viz, protect them from such Insults and outrages and punish at the same time the authors of their misery.

Here, in the great city of Boston, the home of culture, the Athens of America, the hub of the universe, where negroes have been educated and elevated and illuminated for forty years, we have this barefaced justification of a criminal assault by armed soldiers upon peaceful citizens; of a deliberate, preconcerted, cold-blooded attempt to murder, not particular individuals against whom they nursed a grievance, but to commit an indiscriminate savage massacre of women and children because they were white women and children.

The President has truly said that this act was an atrocity without parallel in the history of the American Army. It was indeed, Mr. President, an act of pure savage deviltry; yet it is excused and condoned and justified by the educated negroes, the scholars, the literati, the teachers, the professors, and the clergymen in the great city of Boston.

Mr. President, no enemy of the negro would want any stronger evidence against him to show that he is not fit to bear a part in the government of a civilized republic. No stronger indictment has ever been written against the race than this which is thus written with its own hand.

The Senator from Ohio may claim that he is only defending American soldiers without regard to race or color or previous condition of servitude. If so, Mr. President, I think the Senator from Ohio belongs to the class of whom the apostle said, "They have a zeal for man, but not according to knowledge;" for, Mr. President, the only effect of this agitation will be a tendency to demoralize the discipline of the Army and to unbridle those passions and evil propensities of a race not yet far enough removed from their primitive condition to have learned the civilized virtues of patience and self-control.

Mr. President, in the beginning I confidently expected that the President's action in this case would be received with universal applause. I confess my amazement at the harshness and severity of the assaults that have been made upon the President by his own party friends. This case, Mr. President, is but one of many in which the President has discharged soldiers of the Army without any court-martial and has discharged them without honor. As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] has suggested, if it be true that the President has repeatedly and continuously violated the law and trampled upon the legal rights of American soldiers, then he ought to be impeached. Indeed, Mr. President, if what Senators say is true, the President's action in this case alone is so utterly without justification or excuse that impeachment ought to follow swift and sure. No other punishment can be adequate for a man who wantonly and recklessly, upon an unfair and prejudiced investigation, without the sanction of law and in flagrant contempt of the evidence, imposes a harsh and brutal punishment upon men who have a record of honorable and heroic service and who have done no wrong. That is practically the charge that the Senator from Ohio makes against the President of the United States. In whatever language it may be clothed, however guardedly it may be expressed, it has this meaning or it has none at all.

Every step that the President has taken in this matter from the beginning to the end has been challenged and impeached in a way to call in question not only the soundness of his judgment, but his honor and good faith.

Major Blocksom was selected to make an investigation into the facts of this case; but the Senator from Ohio tells us that Major Blocksom's father forty years ago was a Democrat in the State of Ohio, and therefore that Major Blocksom can not be trusted to make a fair and honest investigation and tell the truth. Mr. President, it is a divine law that the sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children; but I beg leave to question the applicability of that law to this particular case. Especially do I question the right of the Senator from Ohio to pronounce the judgment. He may be the God Almighty of the Republican party of Ohio, but he does not yet sustain that relation to the universe. [Laughter.]

I believe that a man who has an honorable record as an officer and a gentleman, a record without a stain, in the Army of the United States can be trusted to make a fair and honest investigation, even if his father was a Democrat in Ohio, just as Allen G. Thurman was, just as old Bill Allen was, and just as George Pendleton was.

General Garlington was born in South Carolina, and that is paraded as a damning fact against him. Every effort is made, Mr. President, to disparage the honesty and good faith of these honorable officers who conducted this investigation, in order to shield the authors of a most dastardly and infamous crime.

Mr. President, my associations with the Senator from Ohio have been exceedingly pleasant. I have always found him fair and courteous in debate. My personal intercourse with him has shown him to be a genial, generous, and obliging Senator; yet I can remember when I had a very different impression of the Senator from Ohio. I can remember with what frantic energy he used to wave the bloody shirt, a shirt stained blood red by the crimson current of his own rhetoric. [Laughter.] I can remember when the Senator used to go raging over the land, a bifurcated, peripatetic, volcano in perpetual eruption, belching fire and smoke and melted lava from his agonized and tumultous bowels. [Laughter.] I can remember when the Senator from Ohio used to bespatter the South with the gall of his bitterness, until I sometimes thought that he wished all of the white people of the South, men, women, children, and babes at the breast, had a single neck that he might sever it at a blow.

Mr. President, I would not have to go back forty years, nor would I need to trace the pedigree of the Senator from Ohio, to show by such evidence that he is the very last man to sit in judgment upon any case of murder where a negro was the murderer and a southern white man was the victim.

But I will not do the Senator from Ohio the gross injustice of judging him by the words of his own mouth. You could not do the Senator from Ohio a greater injustice than that. am asked by my friends in the South if the Senator from Ohio is really as fierce and as rabid as he sometimes seems to be, I tell them no, that his ferocity is purely oratorical; that it is but the lingering force of the tyranny of habit which continues to have some power over the tongue long after it has been expelled from the heart. [Laughter.]

We can all remember when it was nothing short of treason for a Democratic Senator to question in the slightest degree the accuracy of any statement proceeding from the executive department with respect to the conduct of American soldiers. know not how often I have been denounced as a traitor simply because I have told the plain, unvarnished truth about the President and his then Secretary of War. But, Mr. President, no charge that has ever been made by any Democrat in the fiercest partisan debate has equaled in gravity and severity the accusation which the Senator from Ohio has brought against this Republican Administration. He charges, in effect, that through his selected agents the President prosecuted an inquiry in a spirit of hostility to the accused because of their race and color; and that when even this prejudiced and untrustworthy investigation had failed to develop incriminating evidence, the President then proceeded, without evidence or upon evidence of the flimsiest character, and in flagrant violation of law, to inflict a punishment which the Senator from Ohio describes as "exaggerated, harsh, and brutal.'

The President's act is made to appear in blacker colors from the statement of the Senator from Ohio that the victims of the act were men who had a record of long and honorable and he-Such was the character of the men upon whom roic service. the President, after an unfair and dishonest investigation, with-out evidence and without law, inflicted a harsh and brutal pun-ishment, according to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. President, if it be true that a spirit of injustice has characterized every act of the President in this matter; if it be true that he has conducted an unfair and hostile investigation; if it be true that he has inflicted upon these patriotic and heroic warriors a harsh and brutal punishment, and if the Senator from Ohio can convict him of that, then he will have placed him upon an eminence of infamy from which no man can take him down.

But, Mr. President, is all this credible? What motive can we ascribe to the President? I can imagine motives that might impel the Senator from Ohio to assail the President of the United States, but what motive can we ascribe to the President himself for perpetrating a wanton outrage upon his worshiping and devoted friends, of wantonly offending so great a body of his followers and turning them over en masse into the hands of his personal and political enemies? What motive could he have had for doing it? No man can find it, Mr. President.

To say that the President and his Secretary of War, a lawyer of the highest ability, erred through ignorance of the plain law and because of their incompetency to judge the weight of evidence, is to defend their motives at the expense of their intelligence. No, Mr. President. If it be true, as the Senator from Ohio has charged, that upon an unfair and prejudiced investigation, without either evidence or law, the President has done this act, then his conduct will stand without the slightest palliation or excuse to save it from the brand of infamy and dishonor.

But, Mr. President, there is no such case here. The first question that arises is, Did he have legal and constitutional authority for what he did? And, Mr. President, that is the only question, so far as the Senate has any business with the act. act belongs exclusively within the scope of the Executive authority, then it necessarily follows that the Executive is the sole and exclusive judge of the facts upon which that action based. I do not object to this discussion, because, Mr. President, power may be abused; and wherever great power is lodged there should be the utmost freedom of discussion and of criticism. Even though we have no power to control or to limit his action in this matter, I am glad that it has been made the subject of debate, so that if he has abused even his legal and constitutional power it may be exposed.

But, Mr. President, if the President had legal authority to act and constitutional authority to act, the only thing needed to justify his action, as a matter of fact, is simply to determine whether or not his act was for the good of the service. We are not trying a case in a criminal court where the accused is hedged about by rigid maxims of law and rigid rules of evidence. We are simply to inquire into the fact whether or not from the standpoint of military discipline and for the good of the service the President's action in this case was wise and proper.

The President of the United States under the Constitution is made the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. The Constitution also provides that Congress may make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. Just how far Congress could go under this provision I will not undertake to say. But it seems clear that Congress could not strip the President of the United States of any of his necessary powers as Commander in Chief. It could not take unto itself or delegate to any other the control of the military forces of the United States, leaving the President merely the name without the attributes of a commander.

But no such question arises here. The power to discharge a soldier naturally and historically belongs to a commander in It is an inherent power, a power necessary to command, and it has been so considered in every army and in every age and country of the world. Undoubtedly, then, if Congress has not tried to deprive the President of this power he has it and needs no other delegation than that which goes by necessary implication with his office of Commander in Chief. Congress has done nothing of the kind. On the contrary, it has expressly recognized the President's right to discharge a soldier in the fourth article of war. That article reads as follows:

No enlisted man, duly sworn, shall be discharged from the service without a discharge in writing, signed by a field officer of the regiment to which he belongs, or by the commanding officer when no field officer is present; and no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before his term of service has expired except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial.

It will be seen, Mr. President, that the power of the President, of the Secretary of War, of a department commander, and of a general court-martial to discharge an enlisted soldier before the expiration of his term of service is the same and in each case it is absolute. The President's authority is identical and fully equal to that of a general court-martial. This is made plain by the language of the ninety-ninth article, which says:

No officer shall be discharged or dismissed from the service except by order of the President or by sentence of a general court-martial; and in time of peace no officer shall be dismissed except in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial or in mitigation thereof.

In other words, the President, without a trial, without the action of a court-martial, may discharge a soldier before the expiration of his term of service either in peace or in war. time of war he may discharge an officer without the action of a court-martial, but in time of peace he can not discharge an officer without the verdict of a court-martial.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] quoted numerous articles of war providing for the punishment of soldiers for different offenses. They have absolutely nothing to do with this case. This is not a question of punishment. The Senator lays great stress upon article 62 of the Articles of War, which is as follows:

All crimes not capital and all disorders and neglects which officers and soldiers may be guilty of, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, though not mentioned in the foregoing articles of war, are to be taken cognizance of by a general, or a regimental, garrison, or field officers' court-martial, according to the nature and degree of the offense, and punished at the discretion of such court.

Mr. President, that has absolutely nothing on earth to do with this case. That article provides for the trial and punishment of particular individuals accused of crime. It has nothing whatever to do with the President's power to discharge a man from the service, not as a punishment for crime, but for the good of the service and for the promotion of military discipline.

Mr. President, if the President had attempted to punish these men for murder or for aiding and abetting a murder or for being accessories after the fact to murder, if he had sought to punish them by simply sending them out over the land without a certificate of good character, the utter inadequacy of the punishment, the contemptible nature of the punishment, would have shocked the conscience of the whole country. It is an absurdity to talk of punishing men for murder by discharge without honor from the Army. It was not done as a punishment; it was done as a matter of military discipline.

The question is, Was the Army made better or worse by dis-charging these men? Would it have been better or worse if they had been permitted to continue in the Army, to wear the uniform and to carry the guns of American soldiers? That was the only question the President had to decide. The mere fact that a few of these men were probably innocent and admitted to be so by the President, shows that it was not intended as a punishment, but simply as a necessary act of discipline.

The President's action was absolutely necessary. He either had to do what he actually did or he had to do nothing at all. He had to leave these murderers in the Army of the United States, leave them to commit future acts of violence, leave them to stir up strife and bitterness between the Army and the citizenship of the country, or he had to do what he actually did do. There was no possible alternative except to do what he did or do nothing at all. I say, Mr. President, that it was absolutely necessary for the discipline of the Army; it was necessary if its respect for the rights of civilians was to be enforced; it was necessary, if the people's respect for the American Army was to be preserved, to do this, even though some innocent men should suffer by the act.

Mr. President, we have had a great deal of talk here about the injustice of making innocent men suffer. It may be true as a maxim of criminal jurisprudence that it is better that ninetynine guilty men should escape than that one innocent man should be hanged, but it is not true that it is better that ninety-nine murderers should wear the uniform of the American Army and carry its guns to slaughter peaceful citizens, than that one innocent man should be discharged from the Army. maxim would be destructive of all military discipline.

The President in this case simply did what Robert E. Lee did when a lieutenant-colonel in the old Army, in command of a department. When members of a certain company engaged in a lynching and a murder, and it was impossible to find out the particular individuals who committed the crime, Lee disbanded the whole company and discharged every member of it without honor. There were doubtless some innocent men who were made to suffer. But why did he do it? He did it because it was necessary for the maintenance of military discipline; it was necessary for the protection of innocent and peaceful citizens, and General Lee knew—no man knew better—how important it is in a Republic that peace and amity should be preserved between the citizens and the Army. That is what General Lee did. And, Mr. President, so long as the President of the United States follows in the footsteps of Robert E. Lee, a man whom he himself declared to be the greatest captain of the English-speaking race, greater than Marlborough, greater than Wellington, greater than Grant, and a man whom history will know as one of the noblest and purest souls that ever lived in the tide of times-so long as the President follows in the footsteps of that illustrious man he can not deviate from the path of rectitude or the path of honor. Le us hope that for the rest of his term he will walk in the light of such bright and shining examples.

Mr. President, I have called attention to the fact that this power has been exercised by the President before over and over again. Here is a list of 352 cases, 113 of them for desertion, a crime provided for in the very articles read by the Senator from Ohio as an offense that can not be punished except after trial by a court-martial. Yet here are 113 cases in the last two years where men have been discharged from the Army for desertion simply by the act of the President-discharged without honor and without a trial.

The Senator from Ohio admits that there are cases in which the President may discharge without honor, and he admits that desertion is one of them, although it is one of the very cases provided for in the Articles of War read by him which declare absolutely that no man shall be punished for desertion except after a trial by court-martial. Here is what the Senator from Ohio said. He has admitted that the President did not violate the law in any of these 352 cases. He admitted that there were cases where the President might discharge a man without honor; and here is what he said:

I think the discharge without honor is proper enough in a proper case. Well, what is a proper case? Here is one of the cases the Senator from Ohio supposed to be proper:

There is another man who has deserted. The officers do not think much of him perhaps as a soldier anyhow. He is arrested and brought back. There may be some trouble about proving the case against him.

"There may be extenuating circumstances," and so on, and therefore he is not tried by a general court-martial, but he is discharged from the Army by the act of the President alone, discharged without honor, punished by such discharge, as the Senator from Ohio would argue.

But, Mr. President, the only ground upon which the Senator can justify, as he does justify, the action of the President in discharging these 113 men is that that discharge was not punishment. That is the plain truth about it. It was the President's exercising the legal and constitutional power to discharge a man from the Army whenever he thinks for any reason upon earth that the good of the service and the discipline of the Army would be promoted. I can imagine cases where the very character of the man, the influence of a man upon his associates, would be demoralizing and subversive of discipline, though no single punishable offense could be alleged against him, and when it would be necessary for the sake of discipline and the good of the service to discharge that man from the Army.

The Senator from Ohio quotes from the Army Regulations, which are not acts of Congress, which are not statutes of the United States, but simply rules promulgated by the President himself, to regulate the conduct of his subordinates and not to limit and restrict his own. The Senator read from section 146: Where the company commander deems the service not honest and faithful he shall notify the soldier at least thirty days prior to discharge, and shall at the same time notify the commanding officer, who will convene a board of officers to determine whether the soldier's service has been honest and faithful. Discharge without honor on account of 'service not honest and faithful' will be given only on the approved finding of a board of officers as herein prescribed." This, I say, has nothing to do with the President's action. It is simply instruction issued by him as Commander in Chief of the Army to company commanders and to others as to what course they shall follow before they can give a soldier dishonorable discharge at the expiration of his

It has reference solely, as its context will show, to regular discharges happening after the expiration of the soldier's term of service. He shall give notice at least thirty days prior to the soldier's discharge—that is, thirty days prior to the time when the soldier will be regularly discharged because of the expiration of his term of service; and in giving such discharge, before he can give it without honor, the company commander and the commanding officer must convene a board. That has nothing whatever to do with the President's right to discharge.

The Senator repeatedly declared that the evidence upon which the President acted was of the flimsiest character. It has not seemed so to the President of the United States; it has not seemed so to the Secretary of War, a man whose experience on the bench and at the bar has qualified him for the investigation of questions of evidence. It has not seemed so to Major Blocksom and General Garlington and other officers sent there to make careful investigation into the facts, and it has not seemed so to Assistant Attorney-General Purdy, who was especially charged with the duty of making inquiry into that incident. It has not seemed so to the American consul in the neighboring town in Mexico, who was on the scene and inquired into the facts. And finally Major Penrose, the commander of that battalion, was himself compelled to admit by the force of the evidence that the crime was committed by soldiers under his own command. Here is the man responsible for the discipline of the soldiers under him, a man who must be made to suffer, to some extent, at least, by the failure of his discipline, a man who is to be tried by court-martial for allowing his soldiers, through lack of discipline, to commit this assault upon the people of Brownsville. He is compelled reluctantly, against his own inclination and against his own interests, by the overwhelming force of the testimony, to admit that the crime was not only committed by the soldiers under his command, but that it was committed after a deliberate and preconcerted plan.

Mr. President, if those soldiers did not do it, who did? idea that citizens of Brownsville entered into an elaborate plot to commit an assault upon themselves, that they in some way or other procured imitation United States uniforms and Army rifles and ammunition and that they blacked their faces and kinked their hair and flattened their noses and went out and made an assault upon the town in order to cast suspicion upon the soldiers in that fort is the most preposterous idea that was ever presented to the intelligence of man; and yet that is the only alternative to accepting the proposition that it was committed by the soldiers themselves. If they did not do it, who did? There are plenty of eyewitnesses who saw colored men in the United States uniform, with guns in their hands. What other colored men in and about Brownsville were armed with United States rifles and dressed in the uniform of the Army? There are the physical facts of the bullets, the shells, and the clips which belonged to Springfield rifles, exclusively in the possession of the troops there at Brownsville. If they did not commit the act, who did? If only the identity of the individuals who were seen there that night could be discovered, there would not be the slightest difficulty on earth in convicting these men beyond a shadow of a doubt in a trial before a jury, even in

Mr. President, I was much interested in the speech of my honorable friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILL-MAN]. It was a powerful speech; it was unique and original, as his speeches always are; it contained detached points and arguments of great interest and value; but with all due respect to my friend the Senator from South Carolina it seems to me that his premises were upon one side of the earth and his con-clusion upon the other, with no bridge between. The Senator from South Carolina says he has no more doubt than he has of his own existence that this assault was committed by soldiers of that regiment. He characterized the whole regiment, the whole command there at Brownsville, as a gang of lawless, brutal, murderous desperadoes. He tells us and tells us truly that they have committed the same crime, or like crimes, over and over again; and of this there can be no doubt. Wherever they went, in the North or in the South, they made the same record for ruffianism, violence, and murder. They did not need to be incited by the insults or indignities of negro-hating southerners to commit their acts of violence. They were as ready to shoot up a town and to murder citizens in Nebraska or in Nevada as in any southern community.

I have here a letter written by C. H. Cornell, chairman of the Republican Congressional committee of the Sixth district of Nebraska, telling about the conduct of these troops in that State. I will not read it all, but, mentioning one instance, he says Nebraska, telling about the conduct of these troops in that State. I will not read it all, but, mentioning one instance, he says:

A discharged soldier from one of the negro regiments named Stratton kept a rooming and dance house on a tract of land about 1½ miles from Fort Niobrara. On the night of October 29, 1904, about midnight, while the usual dance was in progress, a team hauling a spring wagon, with four occupants, drove up in front of the door, and one of the inmates, called Lulu Johnson, came out of the house to the wagon. Immediately shots rang out, apparently fired at the wagon, but from a point that each must take effect there or pass into, and in some instances through, the dance hall, which was very well filled with dancers.

When the firing ceased it was found that Turnbull, the driver, was shot through the arm; Raymond Smith, an occupant, through the body; Lulu Johnson, through the breast, near the heart; one horse killed and the other wounded. Inside the building a stove had been hit and shattered, the bar shot up somewhat, but miraculously no person hurt, although there were any number of close calls. Coincidently, two men in khaki were seen, with guns across their shoulders, starting toward Fort Niobrara. Next morning sixteen empty Krag-Jörgensen shells were found on the ground at the point where the firing seemed to come from and the location the two men were seen leaving. The wounded were taken to the Fort Niobrara hospital, where the Johnson woman died the next day; Turnbull recovered promptly, and Smith finally.

The shooting, having been committed off the reservation, came under the jurisdiction of the civil authorities. Consequently the sheriff and coroner were notified, a coroner's jury was empaneled, and a post-mortem held at post hospital, which resulted in determining that from the character of the wound it was made from a Krag-Jörgensen. The murder appeared so wanton and cold-blooded, extraordinary efforts were put forth to try to locate the guilty ones. Pernons who were thought by

Mr. President, wherever these soldiers went they were a terror to good citizens and a disgrace to the American uniform. They had committed murders before, but then, as now, they stood together apparently so solidly to shield the guilty that none of the murderers has been traced or convicted. Can any man give me a good reason why they should continue to wear the uniform of the United States?

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. SCOTT. Providing that one of the colored soldiers who was dismissed could establish before a proper tribunal that he was absolutely innocent, does not the Senator think that a tribunal should be established before which he should be heard in order to give him an opportunity to establish his innocence?

Mr. CARMACK. I should say, if the President thought it was necessary and proper, he ought to do it. I think it would be a proper thing to do. I do not think it would be a proper thing for us to do. I believe that this matter is exclusively within the province of the executive department. I believe the President ought to do everything he can do to separate the inno-cent from the guilty, and if there are any men who were not actually concerned directly or indirectly in the perpetration of this crime, and who have not shown any sympathy with it, who have not attempted to shield the murderers-if there is one such man as that in that battalion, and the President can find him, I do not hesitate to express my opinion that he ought to relieve him from the consequences of the act.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me a moment further?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not know that it is an absolute fact, but by the press we are informed that the President has said if any of these men can prove their innocence there is no objection to their reenlistment. How can they prove their innocence unless we provide for them a tribunal before which they can be tried?

Mr. CARMACK. Well, Mr. President, if they can not, then if we can we ought to do it. That is all there is about it. If there is no other way in which innocent men can be shielded from the consequences of this act, whatever is necessary to be done and can legally and constitutionally be done by any department of the Government ought to be done. I do not hesitate to say that. But I see no reason why the President can not do this. He is himself the tribunal, the constitutional tribunal, in

Mr. President, it is easy to talk about innocent men being made to suffer. There may be a few men in that battalion who neither directly nor indirectly were implicated in this affair. But they must be few. But what have the Senator from South Carolina and other Senators to say about the innocent men, women, and children who must be made to suffer if these ruffians are allowed to remain in the Army of the United States? What community could sleep in peace with this gang of murderers and lawless desperadoes, as the Senator from South Carolina describes them, in the midst of it? The Senator tells us that they have terrorized towns and communities again and again. Must they be permitted to continue to do that forever simply because it is impossible with absolute accuracy to divide the few who are innocent from the many who are guilty?

Mr. President, there are others who have rights in this matter. There are men, women, and children, peaceful civilians. who have a right to be protected against the terror and peril that come to every community to which these soldiers are sent. They have rights superior to those even of supposedly innocent soldiers of the battalion.

The Senator from South Carolina says President Roosevelt lynched 167 men, I believe, because 20 were guilty of a crime. When I find that Robert E. Lee, as a colonel in the United States Army, did precisely the same thing under substantially identical circumstances, I am not willing to apply such an epithet to such an act.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-Mr. CARMACK. When I find

When I find that my distinguished friend from South Carolina, as governor of that great State, discharged an entire company of soldiers under his authority as commander in chief without any form or semblance of a trial I do not say that the Senator from South Carolina was guilty of lynching or even that he approved it-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.
Mr. TILLMAN. I suppose the Senator must have found from his reading that General Ainsworth declares most emphatically that the action of Colonel Lee is not a precedent for the action of

Mr. CARMACK. It may not be a precedent for General

Ainsworth, but it is good enough for me.

Mr. TILLMAN. That may be; but still General Ainsworth ought to know what military law is; and I for one prefer to take his opinion rather than that of the Senator from Tennes-

Mr. CARMACK. I prefer to take General Lee's opinion rather than that of either the Senator from South Carolina or General Ainsworth. I think Lee knew more than both of them on the subject of military law. He knew more than both of them put together will ever learn.

Mr. TILLMAN. Undoubtedly; but the Senator ought at least to be fair enough to quote General Lee's action accurately. He did not discharge the soldiers. He distributed them, I understand, to other companies. He broke the company up and distributed them around.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator is exactly correct. I say he disbanded the company-

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, no. Mr. CARMACK. And afterwards discharged every member of it without honor upon the expiration of his term.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, the man was already discharged when his term expired. General Lee had nothing more to do with him. Mr. CARMACK. He had this to do with it, that he ordered them discharged without honor-lynched them, as the Senator from South Carolina would say.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield further to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CARMACK. I do. Mr. TILLMAN. This form of discharge without honor is only about thirteen years old. All discharges before that time were honorable or dishonorable discharges. The Senator is drawing on his imagination for some of his statements.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I am drawing upon the statement expressly made by the War Department upon this matter. I am not drawing upon my imagination when I say that the com-mander in chief of the army of South Carolina, being no other than the Senator himself, discharged an entire company, not only without honor, but with dishonor, without any trial whatever. I think under the circumstances he did right.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator was not present when I made the explanation about that, and probably he has not read it in the Record. I discharged those men, or dismissed them rather, from the service of the State of South Carolina because they had mutinied against the orders of their commander, myself.

Mr. CARMACK. How did the Senator know they had done it? Mr. TILLMAN. They sent me a written communication refusing to obey my orders and resigning while they were out, under service.

Mr. CARMACK. The point I make, Mr. President, is that the Senator as commander in chief of the army of South Carolina acted upon his own authority, and upon his own responsibility, and upon information exclusively in his possession, and without a single fact or particle of evidence ascertained by a court-martial, by a board of military officers, or by any form of trial whatever.

Mr. TILLMAN. When I did that, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, these men had been called into the service of the State under the laws of South Carolina, and they were subject to the rules and regulations of war. Are these men at Brownsville in a time of war? Is there anything of that sort?

Is there any analogy?

Mr. CARMACK. Oh, Mr. President, that was not a time of war in South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. It was so near it that if the Senator had been there he would have thought it was.

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator from South Carolina had been in Brownsville he might have thought there was something like war there, and there are some people who still think so.

Mr. TILLMAN. Wars do not last for only fifteen minutes. Mr. CARMACK. The man with the empty sleeve in the town of Brownsville probably has an impression that there was something like a state of belligerency at least in that town.

But, Mr. President, there was disorder in the State of South Carolina, and upon evidence which the commander in chief of the army of South Carolina thought sufficient, acting as the sole and exclusive judge of that evidence, acting as the sole and exclusive judge as to his own right and authority in the matter, without any trial whatever, without any day in court except in so far as the governor of South Carolina was the court, just as in this case the President of the United States was the court, without a form or semblance of trial, discharged every member of the company.

Mr. President, I am not criticising the action of the Senator from South Carolina. I think he acted absolutely within the scope of his duties. I have no doubt that he was entirely justified in his act. He tells me that these men were dudes, and I agree with the Senator from South Carolina that lynching is good enough for a dude. He says they were bandbox warriors; that they did not obey the order of their commanding officer, and with his usual directness the governor of South Carolina did what he ought to have done—he taught them a lesson in military discipline, and did it for the good of the service without fooling away any time on a court-martial or a board of military officers

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee

yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CARMACK. That is the kind of a man he is—I will yield in a moment—I think it is one of the highest compliments ever paid to the Senator from South Carolina that the President of the United States should have followed in his shining footsteps. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from South Carolina?
Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.
Mr. TILLMAN. Of course, if the Senator persists in refusing to see that there is no analogy, no comparison, no relation between my action and that of the President of the United States, I can not help that. These militiamen had been called to the service of the State, as I had the authority to do, and were ordered to supervise the sending of telegrams and to allow nothing to go out that was incendiary. They notified me in writing the next morning, by their commanding officer, that they thought that duty was not that of a soldier; that it was obnoxious, and, therefore, rather than be compelled to perform it they tendered their resignation. Does the Senator see no difference?

Mr. CARMACK. They notified you?

They notified me in writing that they did Mr. TILLMAN. not think it was their duty to perform that service and asked to be relieved of it and to be got out of service, and tendered their resignation.

Mr. CARMACK. Do I understand the Senator to say that they notified him through the commanding officer?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes. Mr. CARMACK. Well, Mr. President, the Senator then, upon a communication addressed to him by one man, having no evidence before him upon earth except the statement of one man, proceeded to discharge an entire company, every man of them. Without any form of trial whatever, without any investigation whatever, without any court-martial or board of military officers, without making any inquiry at all as to whether there might not be some innocent men involved, he promptly, immediately pro-ceeded to disband and discharge this whole company and to send them out branded with dishonor as unfit to wear the uniform of the great State of South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, one moment, please.
Mr. CARMACK. I will agree with the Senator it is not exactly analogous. His action was a little worse than that of the

Mr. TILLMAN. In one sense probably it was worse. But here was the President of the United States made cognizant of the fact that murder had been committed, and only 20 men out of 167 had ever been charged with complicity in it or participation in it. Instead of employing all the instrumentalities at his command, instead of using the suggestion of their com-mander that three men be enlisted as detectives and turned loose among them to ferret out the murder and to find those who were guilty, he discharges the whole gang, and he turns loose these men, punished how? Simply by the words on the back of their discharge, "Ordered discharged without honor." Is that sufficient punishment for murder?

Mr. CARMACK. It is no punishment at all for murder. Then what does the Senator think was the Mr. TILLMAN. President's duty? Was it his duty to turn them loose?

Mr. CARMACK. No, Mr. President. Mr. TILLMAN. He has got detective agencies. He has got every instrumentality in the shape of money to offer a reward. What did he do?

Mr. CARMACK. If the President of the United States intended to employ detectives to inquire into this matter, I do not suppose he would publish it to the world or give the information to be used publicly here upon the floor of the United States Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. CARMACK. Men who employ detectives do not, as a rule, notify the persons whom they are trying to investigate in that way. Whether the President employed any detectives or not I do not know, neither does the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. But, Mr. President—
Mr. CARMACK. But we have a right to suppose that he has done and is doing everything he can to inquire into the matter and to find out all he can about it. He has at least done a great deal more than the governor of South Carolina did, who did not employ any instrumentalities at all, who did not make any investigation at all, and who with no evidence before him except the word of one man proceeded to discharge a whole company.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator gets any consolation out of that, of course he is welcome.

Mr. CARMACK. I am not getting any consolation out of it.

It grieves me.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator does not think that the President instead of turning these men loose should have held them in the service, should have held them where he could get at them, should have kept them together so that the detectives could have done their work? Now where are they? Roaming up and down the land as martyrs and heroes.

Mr. CARMACK. There are some Senators who are trying to make them martyrs and heroes. I am not one of them, thank Wherever they may be roaming, they are not wearing the uniform or carrying the gun of an American soldier. They are not disgracing the Army of the United States. They are not doing that. I think the President ought not to have kept them in the Army. I think it is of the highest importance that there should be the best of feeling prevailing between the soldiers in the Army and the civilians, and we can not have that if we keep such murderers of peaceful civilians wearing the uniform of the United States

The Senator from South Carolina says that if one of those soldiers were to come to South Carolina he would probably be lynched.

Mr. TILLMAN. No.
Mr. CARMACK. I understood the Senator to say that.
Mr. TILLMAN. I simply said he was not going there; that is all; and the Senator knows he is not going to Tennessee, either. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know it. I know he could come to Tennessee if he wanted to, and if he did not commit any crime while there he could come just as safely as the Senator from South Carolina could come. You never heard of a man being killed in Tennessee on account of something that occurred in Texas, no matter whether he was black or white, and you never will hear of it.

Mr. President, I think it exceedingly unfortunate from every point of view that this agitation should have been begun. I cast no imputation upon the good faith of the Senator from Ohio, and certainly none upon the Senator from South Carolina. But it seems to me, sir, that there is something else behind these uncalled-for attacks upon the President than a passion for justice and for law. Whence comes this new-found zeal for law and Constitution; this jealousy of Executive encroachment upon the power of Congress and the rights of citizens? This particular act of the President is simply the occasion, but it is not the cause, of this violent and concerted attack upon the Administration. The President has done enough in all conscience to alarm every real friend of the Constitution and of the Republic. Through it all he has had the united, enthusiastic support of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber. We have seen him issue an Executive order embodying the very terms of a pension bill which the Congress of the United States had refused to pass, and give it the force and effect of law. We have seen him in the Panama adventure riding roughshod over treaty and statute and international and constitutional law, and doing it with the unanimous approval of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber. We have seen him make a treaty with a foreign country and put it in force without the advice and consent of the Senate. We have observed his action in the matter of the Indianola post-office. There was a case, Mr. President, where the Senator from Ohio might have truly said that the President acted upon the flimsiest evidence and without the warrant of law. There was a case in which the Postmaster-General officially declared that only a very few people were even suspected of intending to do something wrong and that the vast majority of the people had no sympathy with their conduct and no part in their act, and yet the President abolished that postoffice and compelled all the people of that community, the great majority of them innocent and only a few supposed to be guilty, to go 30 miles to get their mail. Why was not the voice of the Senator from Ohio then uplifted? Where, where, was Roderick then? Why did he not come to the defense of the white people of Mississippi, who were subjected to a great wrong and outrage and violation of law and upon the flimsiest and most contemptible evidence?

Mr. President, there have been numberless infractions of the Constitution and the law by the President, and they have never stirred a ripple upon the placid waters of Republican harmony. It is by the most honorable acts of his Administration that the President has aroused so deadly an antagonism within his own party. He might have continued to trample upon the law to the end of time; he might have multiplied his infidelities to the Constitution until they were as numberless as the stars of heaven or the sands of the sea, and if he had not otherwise offended, no voice would ever have been lifted to protest against the great outrage upon the negro troops at Brownsville.

The President has made the mistake of compelling his party to violate all its traditions, to break with its old-time friends, to turn its guns upon the allies of a hundred battles. He has brought the great railways and trusts and corporations of the country to recognize that there are such things as law and government in this country. Helpless under the compelling force of public opinion that he has arrayed behind him, his party leaders have yielded, snarling and reluctant, but biding time and opportunity to strike, just as the dog that is compelled to fight will "snatch at the master that doth tarre him on.

This is but the beginning of a fight, Mr. President, to break the power of the only leader of the Republican party who ever arrayed it against the enemies of the people. It is an effort to put the party back into its old position, to renew its old alliances, to make peace with its old friends, and establish again its covenant with the plunderers and oppressors of the American people.

And, Mr. President, it will succeed. The resources of the gentleman in the White House can not stay the inevitable hour. He has attempted the impossible task of recreating the Republican party. Mr. President, you may whitewash the Ethiopian and you may unspot the leopard, but you can not make the one a Caucasian or the other a lamb. There is a force as compelling and persistent as the law of gravitation that will draw the Republican party back to the position from which, by main strength and awkwardness, the President of the United States has lifted it up. The Republican party has never felt comfortable in the strange company it has been compelled to keep. It has tried to appear at ease in the stolen garb of Democracy and to comfort itself with the proverb that "every true man's garment fits your thief;" but it has never been able to conquer its yearning for the old suit of stripes which it has worn so long and which fitted it so becomingly and so well.

Mr. President, the Republican party must go back to its old associations, even as the dog returneth to his vomit and the sow, that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire. It will in a little while look back to its brief masquerade as a friend of the people as to a hideous dream.

Mr. President, the issue has been forced. President Roosevelt must fight the course; and I say to Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, you must take your alternative, you must either renominate Theodore Roosevelt or you must give us back our platform. [Laughter.] You have got to do it. It was never yours. In your hearts you are longing for the time to come when you can cast off this Rooseveltian incubus. The Republican party, for the first time in years, will look natural when it sits for its photograph in the next campaign. But, Mr. President, in the meanwhile the sentiment which President Roosevelt has created, which he has helped to arouse against plutocracy, will turn millions of voters to the ranks of the Democratic party, and if President Roosevelt himself chooses to come, he will find there ample opportunity to render great service to the American people and to learn some respect for the Constitution and the law. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries and on the floor.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must admonish the occupants of the galleries that, under the rules of the Senate, applause is not permitted.

During the delivery of Mr. Carmack's speech,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee will suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

After the conclusion of Mr. Carmack's speech,

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I can give to the Senate and to Senators who are yet to speak the comforting assurance that I shall occupy the Senate for a few minutes only. My speech will have one merit at least, which Polonius described as the soul of wit—the merit of brevity. I know this assurance has been often given and not often kept, but in my case and in this instance it will be kept, because I have written what I shall say, and I know just how long it will take me to dispose of it.

I begin, Mr. President, under rather difficult circumstances, while the Senate is still under the glamor of the eloquent peroration of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Carmack]. That Senator treated this question with great seriousness, with almost sepulchral seriousness; but, Mr. President, somehow I can not share and do not share in that view of it.

Mr. President, the discussion upon which the Senate has been engaged for several weeks has taken on such curious phases that it is impossible for me longer to regard it with seriousness.

From real war to mimic war is usually a long stride, but we have seen the feat accomplished here in a single short step. We have on hand a tempest in a teapot—several of them, indeed—and the whole performance has come to be downright funny. I have been greatly diverted by the shifting of the scenes. Surely the Senator from Ohio did not foresee what he was starting when he offered his resolution. It can not be that he intended to provoke the accomplished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] into repeating in the Senate Chamber those polished and most admirable deliverances on the race question with which he has, with rare discretion and at great personal sacrifice, regaled impecunious chautauquas throughout the country, and thereby incite the redoubtable Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson] to make a resentful defense of the American democracy in the name of Roosevelt. Just what the race question has to do with an investigation into the facts of the Brownsville incident may not be perfectly clear to all of us; nevertheless we have had all the phases of the race question discussed except the remedy. We are promised that a solution of this portentous question will be later disclosed, but so far the oratorical pyrotechnics have served only to make the familiar darkness more plainly visible.

Still this diverting flurry has not been without value, since it afforded the Senator from Colorado an opportunity to give authoritative assurance to all mankind, which he did with charming naïveté, just what the Democrats of the country, South as well as North, think of the negro problem. It is a delightful sensation to feel that, after all, those of us who have viewed this dread question with an ever-accentuating fear are, in fact, without any substantial ground for our apprehension. It is all very funny, but also very comfortable—if true.

But, Mr. President, if this race question-introduced as a side show and as a diversion alien to the main circus—has been amusing, so has the real thing itself. A few days ago the sky beyond this center aisle was overcast with ominous clouds. The very atmosphere was surcharged with sulphurous odors. There was a most exhibitaring prospect of a desperate clasha tragic duel to the death between the accepted champion of the President and the accepted champion of the President and the accepted champion of the discharged soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Regiment. Then the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] were marshaling their forces for battle and lurid war seemed inevitable. But almost within the twinkling of an the battle prospect which stirred our pulses to quicker beating vanished and "grim-visaged war smoothed his wrinkled Now, instead of loud alarums and threats of dire portent, we hear only the harmless tumult of a sham engagement. Mr. President, I am disappointed. It is well, of course, for brethren to dwell together in unity, but, being fond of a "scrap"—I mean as a looker-on—I confess myself most grievously disappointed. However, it is but fair to say that, though disappointed, I am not wholly surprised. In fact, I rather anticipated this outcome when I heard that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner], who is a veritable apostle of peace, had arranged an armistice, and I felt sure of it when I heard that the amiable senior Senator from Iowa had left his sick room, braved the winter winds, and hurried to Washington. It was easy odds that when he came and laid his soothing and plastic hand on the mutinous hot bloods and brought them under the spell of his persuasive influence there would be hand shakings and felicitations.

But, after all, Mr. President, there is really nothing left to fight about. If the Senator from Massachusetts had stood by his original amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio we would now have a real issue of real moment before the Senate. That amendment proposed to commit the Senate, in terse and definite terms, to the proposition that in dismissing this negro battalion the President acted within the scope of his constitutional and legal authority. There was meat in the issue thus presented. It was a bold stroke, too, on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts. It was a bearding of the lion in his den. Into the arena the Senator strode like a veritable Ajax, wearing the colors of the king, with frowning visage and lance firm set, challenging the hotspur who dared affront the throne to have a bout with him. As I observed the Senator on that occasion, I felt my admiration for him, already and always great, perceptibly grow; and when the Senator from Ohio instantly and impetuously snatched up the gauge of battle thrown at his feet I fancied I could see blood spots on the moon. Here were foemen worthy each of the other's steel. The outlook was beautiful and full of tragic promise. We were to have a tilt that would become historical; and I repeat, Mr. President, I was savage enough to feel elated at the prospect. longer. The trumpets are silent; pennants no longer wave; "the pomp and circumstance of glorious war" have vanished, and we have sunk again to the humdrum level of the common-place. When the Senator from Massachusetts backed away and withdrew his amendment, a truce was inevitable. There was nothing left to fight about. True, since then we have had debate galore, pro and con, as to the President's authority to do what he did, but to what practical purpose I know not. heavy guns have boomed and there have been fusillades of lighter arms, but there is no way of telling whether anything or any-body has been hit. This is so because the issue as to the President's authority was withdrawn from the Senate when the Senator from Massachusetts withdrew his amendment. No doubt, Mr. President, the question raised by that amendment is, after all, still the one paramount and complicated question involved in this whole consideration, but it is no longer before the Senate in a form to be authoritatively determined. It may return to provoke discord again—that delightful discord which the valiant retreat of the Senator from Massachusetts was the means of silencing. Let us hope it may. But then, what is more likely, it may never come to plague or please us again. In any event there is no such issue before the Senate now. substitute proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, with which he sought to cover his flight and protect his rear, does not even remotely present that issue. His speech in explaining his purpose in offering the substitute was interesting, as his speeches always are; but, like the others, he only fired in the air. There was no target to shoot at. He had removed the target with his own hands, and thereby made it impossible for the Senate to say whether his aim was accurate or whether he had been shooting to any purpose. His substitute can not be measured by his interpretation of it nor by his statement of his motive in offering it. The substitute, like the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, speaks for itself. If it should be adopted. the committee charged with the duty it enjoins would not look to the Senator's speech, but to the resolution itself for instruc-Doing that, they would find that they were instructed by "to make inquiry and take testimony in regard to the affray at Brownsville"—exactly what the resolution of the Senator from Ohio calls for. There is not a word about the President's authority; all that is eliminated.

Mr. President, for myself I am sorry the Senator from Massachusetts did not stand by his guns. But he did not. To inquire why he did not might be indelicate; it might be to trample on the Senator's sensibility. Can it be possible that he feared to make the test and take the hazard of the die? Perish the thought, since above all things the Senator stands for President. Not only on this occasion, but on all occasions, the able and erudite Senator from Massachusetts, with a possible well-known exception on this side the Chamber, is first in the the President needs defense. As defender know he is alert, able, and faithful. His arm is puissant, his tongue eloquent, his loyalty superb. He is a man of power and great worth, and no President could be more fortunate in championship. Therefore, if ever he fails or falters it must be that his cause is bad or that he is subject to some extraneous influence he can not resist. To say that the Senator feared to put his issue to the test would be to say that the President feared also. Can twin fears of such parentage be conceived? Imagine great Jove and Mars, his minister, trembling together! That would be a sight for the gods! Then, indeed, might we Great is the Buckeye State, and greater still its But whatever the cause, the fact remains that the Senator from Massachusetts abandoned the field to his antago-The flag of the Ohio Senator now floats on the Presidential rampart, and it will remain there unless the Senator from Massachusetts returns successfully to the attack. No more finesse, no strategic side stepping or play for place, no beating of tom-toms can obscure that fact or rob the victor of It is perfectly manifest that the substitute with his honors. which the Senator from Massachusetts displaced his amendment differs in no essential particular from the resolution of the Senator from Ohio. There is, of course, some slight variance in phraseology, but between the two there is no difference in meaning, substance, or effect. Both call for an investigation into the facts of the Brownsville butchery, and that is the sum total of all that either calls for. No matter whether the resolution of the Senator from Ohio or the substitute of the Senafor from Massachusetts shall be adopted, the result will be the same. In either event the same investigation will be held and the same report be made.

Why, then, was the substitute proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts? Was it a mere play for position? Mr. President, that seems to be about all we have left of the fight. The Senator from Massachusetts begs only for a modicum of aromatic salve for his bruises, while the Senator from Ohio demands his laurel wreath without a missing leaf. Can not the senior Senators from Iowa and Wisconsin adjust this extremely delicate point of difference? Can it not be arranged so that we may have yet another resolution of the same purport by way of compromise, and perfect peace in consequence? It is possible that the Senator from Wisconsin has impaired his usefulness as a pacificator by his inopportune speech of yesterday. But that should not be so, for his speech, though exceptionally able, was, like others we have heard, directed to the President's power, which is really not now an issue before the Senate, and was therefore, as the matter now stands, not such a deliverance as needs to interfere with his high office as mediator. Besides, we know that whom the Senator from Wisconsin loveth he chasteneth, and on that account the Senator from Ohio should not take mortal offense because the Senator from Wisconsin has shown some natural leaning to the President. Besides, again, the blow was softened by the oft-repeated but always charming oratorical duet of the Senators from Wisconsin and South Carolina. No Senator could set such music going, and then thrust with envious dagger. No; I regard the Wisconsin Senator as still eligible to the arduous office of peacemaker. But, in any event, we have the Senator from Iowa still, and that alone is enough.

In the meantime, Mr. President, the only question of present moment before the Senate is that presented by the Senator from Ohio, namely, Will the Senate order an investigation? Whether the President had lawful right to dismiss these soldiers from the Army or not, he did do it. And now that the question of his authority has been eliminated—I came near saying from the discussion, but from the consideration of the Senate—at least for the present, there is nothing left except to determine whether the investigation moved by the Senator from Ohio shall be ordered. At first I was disposed to vote to turn the whole proposition down; but, on reflection, I shall vote for the resolution mainly because it seems proper that so serious a matter should be thoroughly and impartially investigated. Beyond doubt the exact facts should be ascertained as far as possible.

The occurrence at Brownsville involves the discipline and good name of the American Army, and for that reason it ought to be thoroughly sifted. And then, since the drastic action of the President has been called in question, as being not only without authority of law, but in violation of law, and since it has been further said that as a consequence of that action gross injustice has been done to individual soldiers, the whole affair should be probed to the bottom. True there have been some investigations made under Executive direction, and while such investigations were proper, and while at this time I credit the results of those investigations in so far as facts were developed by them, nevertheless it is manifestly true that those investigations were ex parte in character and somewhat superficial, and it would seem, therefore, that the public interests, as well as considerations of justice, demand a more complete, searching, and adequate inquiry into the facts. If this should be done courageously, patiently, and impartially, as I have no doubt it would be by the Senate committee, it is more than possible that it would result in fixing responsibility for the crime upon those who are guilty of it, and at the same time exculpate those who are innocent. It may result not only in punishing the guilty, but in laying a basis for having justice done to the innocent. As no man guilty of this atrocity is now wearing the uniform of the Army, and since all of them, the guilty and innocent alike, have been dismissed, no public harm can possibly eventuate from the proposed investigation. On the contrary, substantial good in more ways than one may be accomplished by it. I believe the facts when fully ascertained will confirm the President's statement as to what the facts are, and as the investigation may lead to important results in other respects, there should be no hesitancy about ordering it. I am anxious to see the President vindicated. In common with all civilized men, I was profoundly shocked at the murderous assault made by fiends wearing the uniform of American soldiers on a sleeping town at midnight, and instinctively I sympathized—heartily sympathized—with the President's just indignation and impulsively indorsed his vigorous action. After the first outburst of horror inspired by the tragedy was past and men had recovered their poise again, the whole country watched the President's course with a keen and constantly augmenting interest. I am sure I followed him through it all with the greatest concern. The President is not always as bold at the end as at the beginning, and I wondered whether he would yield to the pressure brought upon him to reverse his action or go on resolutely to the end of the road upon which he had started. I observed that some of his advisers manifested timidity and a disposition to retreat. ambient air was made hot with wireless warnings and admonitions to the President, then sailing on distant seas, and, judging by the past, I expected a halting note would be sounded back; but for some reason it did not come.

With the light since thrown upon the question, and the doubt excited by it as to the President's power, I can see that he might well have hesitated; but at the beginning I presumed, as a matter of course, that he was acting within the purview of his authority. Assuming that that was true, I was interested in seeing how he would be affected by the pulse beat which alarmed his deputies at home. Except to the extent that he may be responsible, if at all, for the fiasco here in the Senate, he has so far deported himself with unflinching courage. For once in his phenomenal career he has stood steadfast and firm.

I believed the President's act merited universal approval, and I was strengthened in that belief by the strong presentation made by him and the Secretary of War. And now, Mr. President, just as I was settling down and accustoming myself to the novelty of supporting the President without a doubt as to the wisdom of doing so, along comes the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and says on the authority of his great name, first, that the President has not properly reported the facts, and secondly, that in dismissing the battalion he exceeded his authority and violated the Constitution and the statute law of the land. That upset me. It put me to the necessity of making some inquiry into the President's power. I am still wholly in sympathy with the President, but I am not so confident as before. I do not believe that the President missed the facts very far, and he was right in saying that the Army should be rid of such miscreants. But, Mr. President, I am a great stickler for the Constitution, and I am so unalterably opposed to the tendency and the apparent purpose of those now in executive authority to override the limitations with which their power has been hedged about that I must hesitate to follow the mere promptings of sympathy in a given case if thereby a dangerous precedent is established. Yet, so strong is my desire to support the President in this controversy, I would have to be sure that there was no legal justification for his act before I would vote to disapprove it. But at this time I am bound to confess that doubt is so yoked to inclination that I could not follow the President in his final step without a feeling of insecurity. But, Mr. President, I will not amplify upon that, or else I will be shooting into the air also. I will say what I have to say on that subject when it comes as an issue before the Senate.

In the meantime I think the investigation should proceed. I am aware that there is a disposition on this side of the Chamber to squelch the investigation by voting down all the reso-Intions. At first I was in sympathy with that view, but now I have determined to vote the other way. The investigation can not do any harm, and it may do good in the particulars I have indicated. And it will do good in other ways. Here is a family feud for which Democrats are in no sense responsible, and I see no reason why we should smother the fire or pull chestnuts out of it to save the fingers of any of our friends over there from burning. Aside from the light an investiga-tion would throw upon the facts and the law, the investigation would be a source of intense interest to all and of endless amusement to many. Back of it all there is said to be a masterful game of politics. In this play the mighty men of rival Republican factions will be star attractions, and all the front seats will be occupied by the negro contingent of the American electorate. Let the play go on. The rest of us can stand the pungent odor for the fun of it. The hot days are coming anon, and I think this investigation would greatly enhance the gayeties of the summer solstice. Therefore, for one, at least, I shall vote for the resolution.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it would seem that when Senators refer to the attitude of each other in this regard as being in support of or against the President or the Administration they misconceive the legitimate purpose of this resolution should it be adopted, and they misconceive the legitimate question involved in determining whether or not this resolution should be adopted. There is one thing of which we may be absolutely certain, and that is that the Senate has not the power, that it may not properly exercise supervision over the completed act of the President under consideration. No such power is vested in the Senate, notwithstanding the fact that it cooperates with the President of the United States in determining the Articles of War.

Those articles have been referred to frequently during this discussion as though they emanated entirely from Congress. They are the joint act of Congress and the President of the United States. They must receive the approval of both Congress and the Executive before they are in force. The personnel of the President that participated in the enactment of the statutes which we term the Articles of War does not affect their binding force legally or morally. The fact that the particular President now occupying the office of Chief Executive was not a party to the enactment of the Articles of War does not relieve him in any degree from the consideration and observance of those Articles of War which he would have given to them had he been a party to their enactment.

Mr. President, I have listened with very much interest to, and have been instructed by, the discussion of the question involving the duties and the rights of the Commander in Chief of the Army as to what is meant by that phrase in the Constitution. When that dignity was first discussed in the constitutional convention which framed the Constitution of the United States, it was not contemplated that there would be a standing army, and the sentiment of the convention up to that time was practically unanimous against the existence of a standing army. The term used by those who participated in the discussion of it was always connected with the phrase that is now found in the clause, "when called into active service," and pertained, in the minds of those who had it under consideration, to the Army when in actual service, whether it consisted of enlistment under the call of the General Government or under a call of the States.

Mr. President, there is another thing of which we may be absolutely sure, and that is that there is not an atom of imperial power vested in any Department of the Government of the United States or vested in any individual occupying an official position, and it matters not whether it is the President or the Senate or the House of Representatives or the Chief Justice. There is no imperial power vested in any Department or person connected with this Government. Whatever power the Commander in Chief has he has by virtue not of the fact that for the purpose of establishing uniformity in the personnel of that offi-cer the Constitution says the President shall be the Commander in Chief, but he has it by virtue of the statutes of the United States enacted by Congress, because in the same article Congress is vested with the power and the sole power of making rules for the government of the Army. Those Articles of War, as they are termed, have taken the form of statutes, and they are en-acted as other acts of Congress are enacted. They are enacted by the cooperation of Congress and the President of the United The President as Commander in Chief always, of course, exercises a watchful and vigilant care as to the action of Congress in enacting statutes for the government of the

The courts in construing that provision of the Constitution have said this, and it stands as the last interpretation of that provision of the Constitution. So long as Congress has acted, the President is limited and governed by the action of Congress in exercising the functions of Commander in Chief of the Army. Where Congress has not acted, he then acts within the scope of the general power that is invested in him by reason of Congress having acted at all. That is what the court says; that in the interval, to meet occasions as they arise, he may act on his judgment, but as soon as Congress acts upon those things which in the interval have rested in the discretionary power of the President, the President's discretion ceases, and the act of Congress becomes the law governing the Commander in Chief. That is the law as it is interpreted by the courts and as it stands to-day.

What is the object of this resolution? Is it that we may investigate the act of the President in connection with the discharge of these troops? I would suggest that the resolution be amended, first, in line 2 by striking out the words "such further," because that implies that there has already been an investigation by Congress, and there has not been; in line 2 strike out "as may be necessary," and third, that in lines 3 and 4 the words "discharge of members" be stricken out and the words "conduct of members of" be inserted, and after the word "Infantry" insert "and the members thereof."

The resolution would then read:

That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and hereby is, authorized to take testimony—

Instead of "further testimony"- to establish the facts connected with the conduct of Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry and the members thereof.

Instead of reading, as it does now:

authorized to take such "further" testimony as may be necessary to establish the facts connected with the discharge of members, etc.

That is an accomplished fact. The discharge of the members of those companies is a completed act, and neither the Senate nor Congress has any power whatever to review it.

Now, why sit here and do a vain and useless thing—to attempt to review the act of the President of the United States, which is a completed act? As was said by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] yesterday, Congress has already created a tribunal that may protect individuals in any rights which have been infringed upon by this order. They have the right under existing law to bring a suit in the Court of Claims to recover the pay that may be coming to them and to recover any other property rights of which they may have been deprived by an order issued in violation of their legal rights.

The contract of enlistment is a contract to which the Government of the United States and the enlisting man are both parties. Article 2 of the Articles of War provides that the Articles of War shall be read to the man proposing to enlist before he enlists; that after he has enlisted he shall sign them, agreeing to the terms, and take the oath of enlistment. He becomes a party to it. It is a contract. He is required by the terms of the oath to perform his duties in a manner faithful and loyal to the Government. If he breaks his contract, he comes under the general rule of contracts, and the courts would so interpret it. If the Government breaks its contract, his rights are not affected by it at all. So why should we spend days here in considering whether or not we will investigate the acts of the President of the United States when there is no vestige of power resting in the Senate to do anything if it should arrive at the conclusion that he has acted in violation of the law?

Why should we do it? For the purpose of criticising the President? That would be an undignified function for this body to attempt to exercise. For the purpose of showing that the President was not justified in his act? That is not a part of our duty. There is no reason why we should engage in that pastime. It is entirely competent, however, for Congress or either body of it to investigate any condition of facts that will enable it in the exercise of legislative power to exercise it wisely, for the purpose of future consideration of similar conditions, for the purpose of guiding us in framing such legislation as will avoid such events as have occurred and which we are now considering. That is the only legitimate purpose. It is the only legitimate act that we can perform, and the country should know, it should be definitely announced through the action of this body, that we have not sat here through these days for the purpose of criticising the President of the United States to no purpose.

It should be known to the country that the Senate is sitting here not for the purpose of finding some grounds in the action of the President of the United States to criticise, but that we have been engaged in this inquiry for the purpose of guiding our own body in its present and future consideration of questions of this kind. When we are away from those lines we are without the scope of our authority. When we are away from that purpose then we are exercising no legitimate function whatever. So, if this resolution is adopted at all, then all reference to the acts of the President in discharging the soldiers should be stricken from it, and it should stand simply as a resolution to inquire as to the fact for the purpose of our own information, and not as a basis for further action looking to further criticism of the President of the United States.

Mr. President, it seems to me that it would be most unfortunate that it should go out to the country that we have sat here for two weeks discussing questions with which we have no concern, for purposes that we have no power to serve. Unless the public mind is advised of the real purpose of this inquiry in this discussion a wrong impression will go out to the effect that the Senate of the United States, mistaking the scope of its powers, has undertaken to inquire into the action of the President, which is completely under the assumed power that we may do something to undo that which the President has done. Whether he is right or wrong in his action is a matter which does not concern this body in its official capacity. Whether he is right or wrong in his conclusions as to where the blame is to be placed or as to the manner of dealing with these people does not concern this body in its public and official capacity, however much interest individual Senators may feel in the question.

The judicial tribunal of the United States is vested by the Constitution with the power to review the acts of the President of the United States wherever they affect private property interests. The Supreme Court of the United States may review the acts of the Executive just as it may review the acts of the legislative branch of the Government. Both are limited in the scope of their action by the same instrument. Neither Congress nor the Chief Executive or any branch of the Government can destroy individual or private rights. When they attempt it the court is the only tribunal that can stay the hand. If the President had no power to discharge these men, then it may be that their property rights were affected, and if they were they must appeal to the tribunals provided by the Constitution, and they will be protected in their property rights.

My only purpose, Mr. President, in speaking at all upon the pending resolution is that I might raise my voice against any impressions which might go abroad that the Senate was discussing it with a view of correcting any error or any violation of his power by the President, but that if we discuss it at all it is for the purpose of directing our own steps aright in present or future legislation. That is a legitimate purpose, and we may discuss this or any other resolution of the kind. We may inquire into the facts surrounding the circumstances or into any other facts that we deem will assist us in performing our duty in legislating not for the past but for the future. in regard to this matter is a closed book. The future in regard to like matters is open for us to act to the fullest extent of our constitutional power.

making a contribution to this great debate until to-day. I think if all extraneous and irrelevant matter could have been excluded from the debate it would have received a more dispassionate consideration and a more proper determination. I shall confine myself to the case in point, not reflecting at all upon any Senator who chooses in the course of the debate to take any course that his judgment approves.

The question raised by the resolution of the Senator from Ohio and by his speeches is whether the President had any authority to discharge a battalion of colored troops accused of crime, or whether having any authority he exceeded that authority, and whether the weight of evidence would justify the exercise of the authority if he had it. If it can be shown that the President of the United States was acting within his authorized power, then it is unnecessary to discuss the second question. If, on the other hand, the second can be established, that the President did not have, according to the judgment of the Senate or its committee, a sufficient weight of evidence to justify the exercise of his authority then we are powerless to do anything, and so it is a useless inquiry. So we may ask, What is the utility of all this discussion? I am not one who desires to fetter-the Senate in the free exercise of its power in looking into and investigating everything that may concern the public administration. We are here as a coordinate branch of the Government. In this particular matter we have a grant of power to raise armies and to make rules for the government and regulation of the Army, of the Navy, and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States. The learned Senator from Idaho who preceded was mistaken when he supposed that there was to be no standing Army. The words "when in actual service" do not apply to the Army and Navy of the United States, but simply to the militia of the several States when actually called into the service of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I reluctantly interrupt the Senator, but-

Mr. MONEY. It is all right.

Mr. HEYBURN. I confined that statement to the earlier stages of discussion in the Constitutional Convention. After the second report by the committee on revision, it was then for the first time contemplated that we should have a standing army, but up to that time the sentiment was against it. referring to that period of the consideration of the Constitution when I made the statement the Senator refers to.

Mr. MONEY. Certainly; I accept that, except to say that we are dealing with the Constitution as it passed the Convention and not as it stood in the several stages and processes of its making.

Mr. President, the men who constituted that Constitutional Convention were not only great men in their heroism, in their devotion to liberty, in their courage, and in their patriotism, but they were a scholarly set of men. They were men who were the equal in learning of anybody who ever sat in this Chamber. Many of them had participated in the war of seven years, the great struggle for independence. They not only knew from actual experience under a commander in chief what his duties were. but they had studied in the literature of every country that had recorded its military achievements what a commander in chief was. The statement of the learned Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] the other day in telling us what the commander in chief was considered in different armies of the world was useful to the Senate in the consideration of this matter, not as a precedent, because there is no necessity to hunt for precedents for this case, but because it shows what was the duty of a commander in chief.

When the framers of the Constitution gave the authority to the President of the United States to be the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and the militiamen in the actual service of the United States they meant no empty compliment or distinction, but they meant something tangible and actual, energetic and vital, that he was to be the real Commander in Chief, not, I think, as my very brilliant friend from Tennessee [Mr. Car-MACK | says, that the office had any inherent authority. opinion there is no inherent authority anywhere in any branch of the United States Government. But the Commander in Chief has the authority to act as Commander in Chief, and that carries an implied grant of power to do everything necessary to carry into effect the power of the grant. He was to do what-ever, in his opinion, might be necessary to perform the functions of that great office and make it effective.

Now, if this is true, it is beyond the province of any coordi-Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I had no intention whatever of nate branch of the Government to assail the action of the President in this matter. If it can be proven that the President was not considerate of the evidence, that he did not labor sufficiently, that he did not avail himself of all the means that might be open to him-and of that we have no knowledge, but sur--if all that could be proven it would not invalidate his act. In fact, Mr. President, in my humble opinion, if we should get all the facts, and many more of them than the President had reached, and upon that should base legislation, as I have heard it hinted in some quarters, to restore this battalion to a place in the Army, if the President had not changed his mind as to this offense it would be not only his right but his constitutional duty to dismiss them the very next day after Congress had put them back into the Army.

It does not lie within the power of Congress by any statutory law to curtail or diminish or abbreviate in any way the constitutional authority of another coordinate branch of the Government. This is not a singular view. It is as old as the Constitution itself. I can recall, since this debate has come up, that a long time ago I read the correspondence between Thomas Jefferson and John Adams when debating this question, not between Congress and the President, but between the court and the President. Mr. Jefferson in one letter wrote to Mr. Adams, and he repeated it in quite a number of letters, according to my recollection, that he not only went as far as Mr. Adams, who was a Federalist, but he went further, and he denied that the court could in any manner judge of the constitutional duty of the President of the United States. That view was held by Andrew Jackson, who said again and again that the Executive must for itself judge of the constitutionality of every law.

Now, the President of the United States, whether in his investigation he has been too loose or too searching-in whatever way he may have done it-has had brought to his mind a state of circumstances and facts which show to him that this battalion should be dismissed from the service. We can not review that decision. We can discuss it; we can inquire into the facts, but we are powerless to act. If they want to impeach the President for that, I venture to say there will not be any votes in this Chamber for his conviction. He has clearly, in my opinion, acted within his constitutional grant of power.

I am not alluding now, and I shall not, to any other circumstance than the one in point. I am sorry that the whole debate has not turned upon the point at issue.

The President of the United States must satisfy himself, and it is absolutely immaterial to the case whether any man in the Senate is satisfied with it or not. Would you go to a judge who had written and handed down a decision and say to him: have given too much weight to the evidence of A; you have given too little weight to the evidence of B; you have admitted incompetent testimony in the case of C; you did not understand the law of evidence in relation to D's testimony, and alto-gether you have misapplied the law to the case?" Would that invalidate the judgment? Would the critic get any consolation from that except the one of speaking his mind? That is just what we are getting here. We are speaking our mind. We can not affect anything by our action; and until the utility of this proceeding can be shown, I ask what is the good of passing a resolution instructing a committee of the Senate to get information of a case about which we have no final determination?

Now, if it is necessary to convict the President of having improperly acted in the discharge of what he considered his duty, of course that devolves upon the majority of this Chamber. If they think it is a wise and proper thing to arraign the President and place him before the people of this country in the attitude of a defendant, if he is to be arraigned before the bar of public opinion upon emotion and impulse, and some of a character that are disreputable, I want to know, Mr. President, how it concerns us on this side, except that it is the business of every man in the Senate-it makes no difference what his politics may be; it makes no difference whether he is friendly or unfriendly to the President of the United States-to stand here to respect the Constitution of the United States and to defend in every particular and at every hazard the authority and the privileges of the honorable body to which he belongs, and to be as careful to restrain the President and keep him as far as it can within bounds in respect to his constitutional anthority.

There has been enough of authority, there have been enough of decisions quoted, and there has been able argument about the statutory power of the President. The President, though, carries into effect all the statutes and rules for the government and regulation of the Army, because he is the Chief Executive of this country. It is his business to execute the law. It does not make a bit of difference whether that law is military or civil. It does not make any difference whether it concerns the citizen or whether it concerns a soldier. As Chief Executive he must carry into execution all the laws until the Supreme Court has declared them unconstitutional. But as Commander in Chief he has a distinct set of duties to perform, and those duties no statutory legislation can touch. He is absolutely impregnable.

It has been said it was a case of punishment. But let us look at that a moment. It has been eloquently refuted, I think, but I only refer to it for the necessity of making a point.

The President in his investigation, with sufficient evidence to satisfy his own mind (and that is the only mind that is to be satisfied in his action), has seen fit to eject from the service of the United States a battalion of men. I do not care about calling them colored men, and for the purpose of this debate I am sorry they were not white men, that we might have kept out of it all the feeling and the irrelevant stuff that has been brought I say he dismissed a battalion of United States soldiers in here. upon what he considered sufficient evidence.

Now, Mr. President, why did he do that? To punish any-It does not appear so to me. But he did it because he found an organization of men enlisted in the service of the United States-uniformed, armed, fed, and clothed-who were raised for the protection of this country and the execution of the laws of the land when the posse comitatus shall fail. that this instrument of his, which has been placed in his hands the Constitution of the United States-troops raised and maintained and fed and clothed by the Congress of the United States-were not only an inefficient instrument, totally ineffective for the purpose for which they were organized, but also menacing and dangerous to the peace and happiness and life of the people for whose benefit they were organized and put into

Are we to be told, Mr. President, that, because he can not secure evidence sufficient to satisfy the mind of some Senators. he is to fail to discard this useless but this dangerous instrument. to preserve the morale of the Army, to assure the confidence of the people of the country that they will be protected and not harassed and killed by soldiers of the Army?

Every consideration of duty-waiving his constitutional authority—would lead him to do what he has done. It is not possible that anybody wants to continue in play so insufficient and so dangerous an instrument as this battalion has proved itself to be. The idea that there are a few innocent men can cut no figure whatever in the consideration of their discharge. wanted to undertake to punish these men, then that would have something in it.

The eloquent and distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. For-AKER] said the other day that the grand jury sat upon this case and acquitted these men. He is too good a lawyer to have intended to use that term, because he knows that grand juries do not acquit and do not try. They simply weigh the evidence and find a true bill, and generally upon a prima facie case.

There is a moral conviction upon the mind of every man in that jury, in that court, and everybody in the city of Brownsville, and every unprejudiced mind, I believe, in the United States, that these men were guilty, some of them, of this offense. It was impossible to indict a battalion or a company of men. When you get to Private George and Corporal Jack and Sergeant Jim, named, and swear that they were the identical soldiers who were guilty of this midnight assault and assassination, who could prove it? The judge gave a temperate, moderate instruction to the jury, which they obeyed. When it came to the examination by the citizens' committee, nobody could fix the guilt upon a single individual. So the several investigations which the President has fortified himself with, one after the other, could do nothing more than say that there was a perfect knowledge that the battalion was guilty, but no knowledge that any single individual was guilty.

Then what was the President to do? Was he still to allow this battalion to continue in the service which they disgraced, still to countenance these outrages upon civilization and society? Were they still to assail at midnight the women and children of peaceful towns, still to disgrace the uniform and the flag?

Mr. President, to do that was to invite demoralization and destroy the discipline of the Army that is placed in his hand for his conduct and management in time of emergency and in time of peace.

In my opinion, there is not the slightest difference, as some affect to see here, between the power of the President as Commander in Chief in time of war and in time of peace. There is, however, a difference in many subordinates, for we know very well that a general commanding in a state of siege proclaims martial law without any authority from anybody. He does it ex necessitate rel, because it can not be helped. It is his sole business to bring to a successful conclusion the battle or the siege or the campaign in which he is engaged. He has a right to do it. There are emergencies that invest men with extraordinary power, and it is not unconstitutional that they should so act, because the grant goes with them to do what is necessary to be done to make effective the office which has been given to them. The captain-general of Cuba, under the articles of the provision that organized and created that office, had a power more arbitrary than is exercised by any despot in the world. The King on the throne of Spain, who appointed him, had no such dictatorship as he had. He was absolutely responsible, because it was named in the article that his power was that of a general commanding a city in a state of siege. That means martial law. That means to shoot without trial or conviction, to confiscate, and sell, and plunder, and do anything else, and no tribunal on that account is to be given authority, and there is no authority anywhere to call any act in question. not the law, but by the necessity of the case that implied power, which comes with every original grant of power to every branch of this Government, was brought into action.

I said awhile ago that Mr. Jefferson had his doubts, as did President Jackson also, and I recollect now that in debating the subject of the whole judicial system as keen and acute an intellect as John Randolph, of Roanoke, inveighed most bitterly and sarcastically against giving the judiciary the power to de-clare null, the acts of Congress. To use his language, he said, "It was absurd that a coordinate branch of the Government should permit its acts, deliberately taken, to be declared unconstitutional by another coordinate branch of the Government." That was his view about this thing; but we take it as it resulted at last, in three great divisions of power.

This is the political branch of the Government; the brain of the Government, which thinks for the Government. The Executive is the hand that obeys the will of the brain; and the courts decide upon the constitutionality of the acts that pass this body; determine suits between States and citizens of States, and so on.

Mr. President, in this whole matter I have neither fear, prejudice, nor predilection. I am looking at it from a strictly impersonal point of view. I am regarding it as a Senator from the State of Mississippi, and my duty here is just as binding upon me to support the constitutional power of one branch of the Government as it is of another branch of the Government. have risen often in my place here and have said to the Senate that I thought that they were a little bit too subservient to the will of the Executive. I, perhaps, made those reflections improperly, but they came from an honest opinion about it, and from a desire that we preserve the power granted to us and exercise it, not only for the good of the present administration of public affairs, but for the permanence of our free institutions. When one branch of this Government begins to encroach upon another, then we will see the beginning of the end. The fear that haunted the mind of Thomas Jefferson, the greatest political philosopher who, in my opinion, ever lived, was continually that the Supreme Court—as he called it, the mind of the court should after a while so invade the powers of Congress as to dissipate them and lead to general confusion.

Mr. President, I think it is to be deprecated, from many points of view, that this discussion has taken so wide a range. I would have been glad if the whole of the resolution could have been voted upon with fifteen minutes of debate. I do not think it needed any discussion to convince anybody whether it was necessary or not necessary to take testimony in a case in which the Senate could not act. It can not be the basis of any legislative action, except perhaps a resolution of opinion, and it would be nothing more than that, simply a resolution of the Senate, which is an expression of opinion and has no legal force anywhere, and must not even be necessarily considered by the President of the United States, nor read by him. I think, Mr. President, that when he exercises his clearly granted constitutional power, there can be no criticism upon that to affect its validity, and there can be no change in the result of his action. All the powers of this whole Government can not; against the will of the President, reinstate these men in office.

Now, as to the fact that some of them have been done injustice, that is to be lamented, if it is true; but, according to the language of the official documents that have been transmitted to us and according to the statements repeated over and over again by every solitary man concerned—by Major Blocksom, by General Garlington, the Secretary of War, and the President the whole body, if they were innocent, preserved a guilty silence to exculpate or protect the criminals. In my State there is no such thing as an accessory before and after the fact-they are all principals; and in this case it seems to me they are all principals. If it is true that a man can show an alibi, that certainly will be used for his benefit, and he can avail himself of it to be reinstated in all the rights which he has forfeited by his discharge.

Mr. KNOX obtained the floor.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. KNOX. Ves

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, as a member of the Military Committee it strikes me that if the Senate would only allow us to have an investigation of this matter before the case is argued it would be much better. I am not a lawyer, and sometimes I thank God that I am not when I see the differences there are between very eminent attorneys. I am a member of the between very eminent attorneys. I am a member of the Military Committee and have not taken part in this discussion because I wanted to try to divest myself of any prejudice that I might have and act in the capacity of a judge. the Senate will allow this matter to go to the Military Committee or to some other committee, and, after they have investigated it, allow them to report to the Senate of the United States, and then let us have the discussion and the learned opinions of the attorneys of this body.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, notwithstanding the admonition and very excellent advice we have just received from the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scort], I have the temerity to make a few observations about the resolution now pending before the Senate.

The propositions advanced by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] when this debate began, challenged, as they necessarily must have challenged, the attention of the lawyers not only of this body, but of the bar of the United States. given some time and some thought to their consideration, primarily for the purpose of self-guidance, and for the possible purpose of making some contribution that might be useful in the debate upon the resolution. But, Mr. President, the industry of my colleagues has been so great, and these questions have been so fully and lucidly discussed, that I can not find it possible to justify myself in doing more than announcing the conclusions I have reached and to announce them mainly in the language of the authorities by which they are sustained.

It must be conceded, Mr. President, that the Commander in Chief of the Army has the power to discharge any man or any number of men for the good of the service. This power inheres This power inheres in the office of the Commander in Chief and is part of his power, unless it is, if it can be, taken away by statute. Not only is this power or function not taken away under the laws of the United States, nor qualified by any positive enactment, but, on the other hand, it is distinctly recognized by statute law, by judicial decisions, and by Army regulations, which have the power of law.

By legislative enactment and constitutional provisions: The Constitution, in Article II, section 2, says:

The President shall be Commander in Chief. The Articles of War-article 4-provide:

No discharge shall be given to any enlisted man except by the order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a court-martial.

Observe, Mr. President, that this statute places the power in the Commander in Chief, his agent, the Secretary of War, and the commander of a department. General Lee's order of October, 1864, is an example of the discharge by the commander of a department, and is therefore, in my judgment, a precedent in this case.

judicial interpretation: Section 1229 of the Revised Statutes provides that "no officer in the Army shall in time of peace be dismissed from the service except on the sentence of a court-martial;" and yet in Keys v. United States, reported in 109 U. S., at page 336, citing Blake v. United States, reported in 103 U.S., it was held that the President of the United States had the power to supersede or remove an officer, notwithstanding the provisions of this statute.

Of course, Mr. President, I admit that there is some difference between the removal of an officer by the appointing power and the termination of the contract of enlistment by the Commander in Chief, but there is none in principle, both being for the good of the service. The appointment of an officer is during good behavior, and the contract of enlistment is so long as the soldier's conduct shall be honest and faithful.

By Army regulation: Army regulations have the power of law, they being the rules promulgated by the executive department and having been recognized by Congress in the provisions for their modification and publication.

Article 21, section 137, of the Army Regulations, provides for the discharge of an enlisted man "by order of the President or the Secretary of War," and section 148 provides that the Secretary of War may specially order the discharge "without

So it will be seen, Mr. President, that, as Commander in Chief, the President has the power to discharge; that this power is not taken away if qualified by statute law, but is fortified by legislative enactment, by judicial decision, and by Executive regulation.

The President of the United States directed the discharge of certain members of Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of Infantry. He did not disband the companies; he did not wipe out the organization. He could not do that, because Congress has fixed the number of regiments and the division into battalions and companies. He discharged many enlisted men who were members of certain companies. If he had the right, which in my judgment he clearly had, to discharge one, he had the power to discharge one after another or many at the same time. The suggestion that the power may be abused can not be urged against the existence of the power.

The President of the United States has the power to remove, with some exceptions, all the administrative officers of the Government. Yet it is no argument against the existence of that power that he might thereby be enabled to stop the operations of the Government. If he had the right, as I say, to discharge one, he had the right to discharge many.

By the fourth article of war, Mr. President:

FOURTH ARTICLE OF WAR.

No enlisted man, duly sworn, shall be discharged from the service without a discharge in writing, signed by a field officer of the regiment to which he belongs, or by the commanding officer when no field officer is present; and no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before his term of service has expired, except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial. *

There are three forms of discharge

FORMS OF DISCHARGE.

This article, in its second clause, specifies two kinds of discharge as authorized to be given to soldiers before their terms of enlistment have expired and which are quite distinct in their nature.

I am now reading from Davis on Military Law.

The one is given by Executive order and the other by sentence; the one is a rescinding of the contract of the soldier, authorized to be resorted to whenever deemed desirable, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, etc., and is in law an honorable discharge or a discharge without honor, as the case may be; the other is a punishment, and therefore a dishonorable discharge. One of the officials named can, of his own authority, no more order a soldier to be, in terms, dishonorably discharged than can a court-martial adjudge a soldier to be honorably discharged.

The author then goes on to speak of the discharge by Executive order, the type of discharge with which we are now dealing, and this statement of the author is amply supported by the authorities

Continuing to quote from Davis:

DISCHARGE BY EXECUTIVE ORDER.

Although the engagement of the soldier under his contract of enlistment is for a term certain, the Government is under no obligation to retain him in service to the end of the stipulated period, and, under the authority conferred by this article, may "terminate at pleasure an enlistment without regard to the soldier." It is essential to the discipline and efficiency of the military establishment that the Government should "not only have but should be able to exercise this power without question or controversy" and at its discretion.

Why, Mr. President, we all know the engagement put, as it is, on the basis of a contract is an engagement for a personal service. We all know that in our domestic menage and in all the engagements for personal service the status can be changed at will by the employer. No man has a right to remain in the employment of another against the will of the employer. The service can be terminated at any time, subject, of course, in civil life only to liability for damages for breach of contract.

Mr. President, the statement I shall now read from O'Brien's Military Law seems to me to cover this case like a blanket He

If a national army be established, it is indispensably requisite that order and discipline should be established and maintained in that army. To effect this it is necessary that the duties of the military be defined and their performance enforced, under appropriate penalties, by tribunals appointed for that purpose. For this reason rules and articles of war are ever found to accompany an army. There is yet a stronger motive for their establishment, which relates to the tranquillity and security of the State, for nothing could be more dangerous to the public peace and safety than a licentious and undisciplined military. Such a force would be merely an armed mob; and our own experience, as well as that of other nations, has given us sad but useful lessons in the mischief to be apprehended from such an assemblage. The aim of all military legislation should, therefore, be twofold: First, to render the army as efficient as possible against the public enemy; and, secondly, to deprive it of all power of injuring the country which supports it. (O'Brien, Military Law, 25.)

In United States v. Eliason, reported in 16 Peters, the Supreme Court has said:

The power of the Executive to establish rules and regulations for the government of the Army is undoubted.

The Secretary of War is the regular constitutional organ of the President for the administration of the military establishment of the nation; and rules and orders publicly promulgated through him must be received as the acts of the Executive, and as such be binding upon all within the sphere of his legal and constitutional authority.

Mr. President, I call the attention of Senators to the following sentence contained in this opinion:

Such regulations can not be questioned or defied because they may be thought unwise or mistaken. (United States v. Eliason, 16 Pet., 301-302.)

Says Attorney-General Legare in his Opinions to the President, reported in 4 Opinions Attorney-General:

dent, reported in 4 Opinions Attorney-General:

Whatever I might have thought of the power of removal from office, if the subject were res integra, it is now too late to dispute the settled construction of 1789. It is according to that construction, from the very nature of executive power, absolute in the President, subject only to his responsibility to the country (his constituent) for a branch of such a vast and solemn trust. (3 Story's Com. on the Constitution, 397, sec. 1538.)

It is obvious that, if necessity is a sufficient ground for such a concession in regard to officers in the civil service, the argument applies a multo fortiori to the military and naval departments. That the power is a tremendous one, and that if tyrannically exercised, none can be imagined more intolerable and more revolting to a free people are propositions which all will admit. That brave and honorable men, such as alone are worthy of a military commission, should be subject to a capricious despotism, which may not only deprive them of their profession, but even sully their good name, must be felt to be a case of very peculiar hardship. Yet—

The Attorney-General goes on to say—

The Attorney-General goes on to say-

these considerations have not prevented nations jealous of their rights and earnest in upholding and enforcing their laws against all prerogative from acknowledging the necessity of such a power in the commander in chief of their army and navy.

From the organization of the Government, under the present Constitution, to the commencement of the recent war for the suppression of the rebellion the power of the President in the absence of statutory regulations to dismiss from the service an officer of the Army or Navy was not questioned in any adjudged case or by any Department of the Government.

I am reading from Mr. Justice Harlan's opinion in Black v. The United States (103 U.S.):

The United States (103 U. S.):

During the Administration of President Tyler the question was propounded by the Secretary of the Navy to Attorney-General Legare, whether the President could strike an officer from the rolls without a trial by a court-martial after a decision in that officer's favor by a court of inquiry ordered for the investigation of his conduct. His response was: "Whatever I might have thought of the power of removal from office, if the subject were res integra, it is now too late to dispute the settled construction of 1789. It is according to that construction, from the very nature of executive power, absolute in the President, subject only to his responsibility to the country (his constituent) for a breach of such a vast and solemn trust. (3 Story, Com. Const., 397, sec. 1538.) It is obvious that if necessity is a sufficient ground for such a concession in regard to officers in the civil service, the argument applies a multo fortiori to the military and naval departments. * * I have no doubt, therefore, that the President had the constitutional power to do what he did, and that the officer in question is not in the service of the United States." The same views were expressed by subsequent Attorneys-General. (4 Opin., 1; 6 id., 4; 8 id., 233; 12 id., 424; 15 id., 421.) * * *

In addition thereto, the justice states:

In addition thereto, the justice states:

Such was the established practice in the executive department, and such the recognized power of the President, up to the passage of the act of July 17, 1862, chapter 200 (12 Stat., 596), entitled "An act to define the pay and emoluments of certain officers of the Army, and for other purposes," the seventeenth section of which provides that "the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized and requested to dismiss and discharge from the military service, either in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or volunteer force, any officer for any cause which, in his judgment, either renders such officer unsuitable for, or whose dismission would promote, the public service.

In reference to that act Attorney-General Devens (15 Opin., 421) said, with much reason, that so far as it "gives authority to the President, it is simply declaratory of the long-established law. It is probable that the force of the act is to be found in the word 'requested,' by which it was intended to reenforce strongly this power in the hands of the President at a great crisis of the State." * * (Blake v. United States, — U. S., 103.)

It is well settled that Army regulations when directly approved by Congress have the absolute force of law equally with other legislative acts until repealed by the same power. Congress so treated them when it passed the act of June 8, 1872, chapter 348 (17 Stat. L., 337), providing that the fifth section of the act of May 8, 1872 (17 Stat. L., 83), should not be held to repeal that part of paragraph 1030 of the Revised Army Regulations of 1863, with which it appeared to be in conflict, thus recognizing the regulations approved by Congress in that year as having the same force as Congressional enactments.

On the other hand, it is just as well settled that regulations not so approved have the force of law only when founded on the President's constitutional powers as Commander in Chief of the Army or are "consistent with and supplementary to the statutes which have

Mr. President, I am not opposed to the passage of a resolution authorizing or directing the Committee on Military Affairs to make an investigation into the facts concerning this unfortunate affair. I desire that my position shall be clearly understood. It is my deliberate opinion-and I think it is the opinion of the majority of the lawyers of this body-whether you put it upon constitutional grounds, whether you put it upon statutory grounds, whether you put it upon the rule established by the Army Regulations, or whether you put it upon them all, that the President of the United States had the power to discharge these enlisted men from the Army of the United States.

Mr. President, if the President had the power to discharge, if he had the power to act, he necessarily had the power to determine under what circumstances he would act. It was a question not for us, not for the community to determine whether we or it would, under the same circumstances and with the same facts before us, entertain the same opinion, or whether we would predicate our action upon the same belief. It was a question for the President of the United States, making the inquiry in any way he saw fit, to determine in his own conscience, subject to his responsibility to public opinion and possibly to the impeaching power of Congress, whether he was doing justice or injustice to these men under the facts.

Mr. President, I can not accept the proposition that it was the duty of the President of the United States, under circumstances such as surrounded him, to have allowed the status quo to have remained as he found it. I can not believe that he was not called upon to immediately and promptly act as he viewed and understood the Brownsville case.

Why, Mr. President, if it had not been his duty when he believed—and I am not alleging either the truth or the falsity of that belief; I am not contending for its soundness or whether it was a mistake-but if he believed that on the night of the 13th of August, 1906, fifteen or twenty men belonging to the garrison at Fort Brown had gone forth and murdered or at-tempted to murder citizens of Brownsville it was his duty to If he did not have the power to act on that occasion, what would have been his power if the act had been repeated upon the following night, still unaccompanied with ability to identify the perpetrators of the deed? Suppose that on the following night fifty men had gone out from the garrison and fifty citizens of Brownsville had been slain, should the President have waited until he could lay his finger upon the individuals who perpetrated the offense? Why, Mr. President, he might have waited until the community had been "shot up" piecemeal. The time for him to have acted was when he was convinced that men of the garrison had perpetrated the deed. If he had not acted and the offense had been repeated the President's condemnation would have been swift and severe.

Mr. President, if it was within the power of the President to act, and if it was within his power to ascertain the facts upon which he acted, then I am not in favor of any resolution which, upon its face or in any way, seems to suggest the idea that we are challenging and inquiring into that power or its exercise. And yet, upon the other hand, I can see clearly that there may be a possible legislative duty to perform in respect not to the things that were done at Brownsville, but in respect to the things that are suggested by what was done a Brownsville, and that it would be entirely proper to conduct an investigation which is clearly within our power and for our own purposes. Besides, Mr. President, I think there can not be too many investigations of that dastardly deed, as some one of them may ultimately lead to the identification of its real per-

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I take the floor at this time because, so far as I am aware, there is no other Senator who desires to speak to the pending resolution. If there be any Senator who desires to discuss it, I would prefer that he speak before I speak, for I trust that I will be allowed, under all the circumstances, to close the debate. That, I suppose, according to parliamentary usage, is my right.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me to make a statement?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCum-BER] stated that he desired to be heard. I merely mention it for the Senator's information.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, that I suppose everyone will concede the propriety of his closing the discussion on this matter. Nevertheless, if he should say anything in the speech which he is about to deliver that calls for some answer. I imagine there will be no objection to its being made.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly not, and I am very liable to do that. Somehow or other I feel just as though I might.

Mr. CULBERSON. We still have the power to close.
Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I wish to commence where the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] left off. His closing remarks were in the nature of a criticism upon the form of the resolution that is under consideration. This resolution, No. 208, is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and hereby is, authorized to take such further testimony as may be necessary to establish the facts connected with the discharge of members of Companies B; C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, and that it be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report thereon, by bill or otherwise.

There is another paragraph which I accepted, offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], authorizing the committee, or any subcommittee it may appoint, to sit at Brownsville if deemed advisable, but I have read all that I care to have go into the RECORD.

I call attention to the fact-and in making this statement I am undertaking not only to answer the Senator from Pennsylvania, but also other Senators who have spoken to the same effect—that what is called for by this resolution is an investigation of facts—nothing else. There is not by this resolution any question of the power of the Chief Executive raised. can not be under the resolution or within the scope of it any criticism whatever of anything the President of the United States has done. I have no purpose of that kind. I do not understand how Senators can imagine that there is within the scope of the proposed resolution any possibility for this investigation to take such a course or such a range as that it would involve anything of that nature. It calls for facts-facts connected with the discharge of the soldiers

Why do I mention the discharge? That is an executive act, Senators say. I say discharge, because it is the discharge about which we are all concerned. If the discharge of these soldiers had not been a result of the affray at Brownsville, there would not have been any thought on the part of anybody of having an investigation of the facts connected with the affray at Brownsville.

But, Mr. President, as I have said on another occasion, I am not particular about the language. I am willing to accept any language that will satisfy Senators by which the committee will be authorized to go to the bottom of this matter and establish the truth, if they can establish it, and by which, in undertaking to discharge that high and important duty, these men who stand arraigned before the country as criminals will have a chance to be heard in their own defense. I am more concerned about that than I am to know whose resolution is adopted or what shall be the language employed in framing that resolution.

But, Mr. President, since when did Senators become possessed of this sensitiveness on this point? This is not the first resolution we have had under consideration in the Senate in regard to this matter during the present session. I call attention to two resolutions, for both of which I think every Senator here perhaps voted, and a number of Senators who are now taking exception to this language spoke in support of them.

In the first place, we adopted on the 6th day of December a resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Pennsose]. I do not know what the truth is, but the papers announced that that resolution has met with the approval of the President of the United States, that it had been submitted to him, and that the Senator offering it was authorized to say to the Senate that the President would be glad to have us adopt it. Now, what does it say?

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, full information bearing upon the recent order dismissing from the military service of the United States three companies of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of Infantry, United States troops (colored).

Nobody took exception to that as calling on the President for information in regard to a purely executive act. Nobody took occasion when that resolution was under consideration to say, "What is the use to pass it, for it is beyond the control of the Congress, and we can not do anything about it, no matter what the answer may be."

That is not the only resolution which we then had under consideration. Senators will remember that I offered a resolution which was adopted on that same day. I read just the commencement of it. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate copies of all official letters, telegrams, reports, orders, and so forth, filed in the War Department in connection with the recent discharge of the enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry.

Did anybody take exception to the form of that resolution? No one did. On the contrary, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] spoke in support of that resolution. He spoke on both of these resolutions, for they were both under consideration at the same time. I quote from the Senator's language, as employed on that occasion:

Mr. President, I am opposed to the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania. My opposition to it is based entirely upon the form of it. This resolution does not, so far as the subject-matter goes, fall within the class of inquiries which the Senate has ever been accustomed to address to the President. It implies on its face, Mr. President, a doubt here which I think does not exist—as to whether the Senate is of right entitled to all the facts relating to the discharge of the three named companies or not.

Further along in the course of his remarks he used this

Mr. President, in time of peace as to matters relating to the organization and the administration of the Army there can be no secrecy. It is purely domestic public business, as to which the Congress has a right to know. I should be very much disappointed if in a matter of this kind the Senate should address the inquiry to the President, coupled, as it must be, with the suggestion that we doubt our right to the information. I think it is a bad precedent to establish. In such matters I think we ought to maintain the practice which, so far as I remember, hitherto has been unbroken. Therefore I am opposed to the form of the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I am in favor of the form of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me a word?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.
Mr. SPOONER. I would not, if I had the power, change a word the Senator has read.

Mr. FORAKER. I am not surprised that the Senator says that. Of course he would not. Why should he? What I am calling attention to is the fact that no Senator criticised the resolution because it called for facts relating to and connected with the discharge of the members of these three companies. The facts we wanted were facts connected with the discharge. We did not care anything about the affray at Brownsville, except only as the affray at Brownsville made up facts that had led to that discharge. That is why we wanted them. Nobody thought then to say, "Oh, this is an Executive act, about which the Congress has no right to concern itself, because when you get the facts you can not do anything about them."

Now, it is not to be wondered at that when I came to draft the present resolution I should have employed precisely the same language that stood muster on these two former occa-I did not know anybody would raise any question about it. I was not offering a resolution here calling for anything that criticised the President; nothing that called in question his exercise of power. I was calling for the facts. What for? To criticise the President, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] said a moment ago? I have not criticised the President. I have been trying to defend the President. I have said I thought the President had been imposed upon, and I think so still, and I think before we are done with this investigation the President himself will agree with me in that particular. But that is all foreign to our present purpose. am not going to be drawn into any discussion of that at this

Why, then, did I offer the resolution? What was the President's order? I had that in mind. The President's order was that these men should be by name discharged-practically all the members of these three companies. But he conceded, as everybody else conceded who had to do with it officially, that in all probability there were quite a number of these men who had not only not participated in the shooting up of Brownsville, but who also had no knowledge whatever about it to withhold from the inspection officers or from anybody else. President, in recognition of the fact that he might be imposing a great hardship, as we are now told we must call it, upon in-nocent men, said: "I will undo and relieve the hardship so far as I can in behalf of any of these men whom I have just discharged who will come forward and by satisfactory evidence show that they are innocent of the shooting, innocent of perjury, and innocent of withholding knowledge of which it was thought they might have been possessed."

Where and how are these men who claim to be innocent—and they all claim, under oath, to be innocent—to appear and by satisfactory evidence satisfy somebody who is authorized to take that evidence that they are innocent? Is there any place so competent for them to be given an opportunity to appear as before this great committee, the Committee on Military Affairs, consisting of thirteen men, in the judgment of every one of whom the Senate would have confidence and in the judgment of every one of whom, I think, the President of the United States would have entire confidence.

Suppose a case: If we pass this resolution, witnesses will be called; the whole matter will be gone into. If it should turn out, as I think I know in advance that it will, that this and that and the other soldier, perhaps a hundred of them, or even more of them, maybe all of them, will satisfy the committee that they had no part in the shooting and had no guilty knowledge to withhold, are they not then within the terms of the President's order? Is it not a high duty for us to give them an opportunity to place themselves where the President says he will extend a helping hand to them if they can so place them-

So, Mr. President, it is not the purpose of the investigation to embarrass anybody or criticise anybody. And after the long service I have had here I do not like the insinuation that goes with some of these remarks that have been made that there is a purpose other than that which should be the purpose of the Senate acting only with reference to the public good and to do justice to men who certainly need the help which it is within our power possibly to extend them. Such were the purposes of the resolution, and I employed the language I did only because it seemed appropriate; because it had been employed twice before in the other resolutions upon which I have commented.

But, as I said, I have no disposition to stick in the bark about this matter. What I want is that we may open the door to these men to come in, if they want to, and offer whatever evidence they may be able to command to show that they are, as they claim to be, innocent of this awful crime. If they can not show that, the clemency of the President in the respect to which I have called attention will not avail, but if they can show that, I would not believe that the President of the United States would hesitate one moment to do all in his power to reinstate the men as to whom, by a unanimous vote, we will assume, of our committee, we should certify back to this body "we have fully examined into this case, and we believe that A B and C D and E F and G H, and so on down through the whole list, as to whom we may be able to make such a certificate, are entirely innocent of having participated in the shooting or of having withheld evidence. We believe their service has been honest and faithful, and we recommend that the President withdraw so much of his order as debars them from reenlisting, and that the Congress of the United States pass a bill restoring them, if we have that power, to their place in the Army and to all things they have lost in consequence of this order." Would not the President of the United States be the Army and to all things they have lost in consequence of this order." Would not the President of the United States be rejoiced if in that way, through our help, a hundred of these men could be relieved of this awful stigma which he, by his Executive order, has placed upon them? If he would not, I do not know the man. If he would not rejoice, he is the only man in this country, in my opinion, who would not. I think he would be rejoiced in such a case.

But now, Mr. President, to meet the differing views of Senators, I offer the resolution I sent to the desk, which I understand will meet their objections, as a modification of the resolution that is under consideration, and I ask that it may be read and printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DICK in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved. That the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to take and have printed testimony for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts with reference to or connected with the affray at Brownsyille, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906. Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during sessions of the Senate, and, if deemed advisable, at Brownsyille or elsewhere, the expenses of the investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate. the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly. Mr. SPOONER. Is it the desire of the Senator to proceed with his remarks at this time or to take up the resolution tomorrow and make his speech?

Mr. ALDRICH (to Mr. SPOONER). To-morrow there are the eulogies on the late Senator Bate.

Mr. SPOONER. Then to-morrow the pending resolution will not be taken up anyway.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me say just one word before I take up this other matter. I want to say it in this connection, and then I will yield to the Senator.

I desire to say that I offer this modification with the understanding that it is not to be contended by anybody that it is capable of a construction that will limit or restrain or restrict our inquiry as to any facts connected with any of these important transactions.

Now, as to the Senator's suggestion that I stop here until tomorrow morning, I think it is a good suggestion, and I believe I shall act upon it. I see it is late.

Mr. SPOONER. That will give the Senator an opportunity to speak more connectedly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Notice has been given by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] that to-morrow, as I remember it, the eulogies upon the late Senator Bate will be delivered. I imagine that the morning hour could be used for the purposes of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes. Mr. ALDRICH. Probably we could get through with this discussion in time to have a vote taken before we adjourn to-

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know how long it will require to say what I want to say. I think I can get through perhaps in an hour's time. At any rate, I will be glad to resume in the morning and get through as quickly as I can.

Mr. LODGE. Immediately after the routine morning business?

Mr. FORAKER. Immediately after the morning business I will resume the floor.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 17, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, January 16, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The following prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev.

HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.:

Eternal and everliving God, whose ways are past finding out, we thank Thee that amid the perplexing and inexplicable problems of life we may look up to Thee and call Thee Father, believing that nothing comes to us through hate or revenge, but through love and mercy; that when a calamity comes upon any people it makes the whole world akin, teaching fatherhood and brotherhood.

Our sympathies therefore go out to the people of Jamaica, and we most fervently pray that in that great calamity they may be comforted by the blessings of Heaven and by the helping hand of all the world; that we bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RESIGNATION OF COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENT.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, just prior to adjournment, the Chair announced my appointment as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. I respectfully request that the House relieve me from further service on the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he be relieved from further service on the Committee on the Judiciary. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DAM ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER AT GREGG SHOALS, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 21402.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

Permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentle-man from South Carolina if this bill has a unanimous report? Mr. AIKEN. Yes; it has been unanimously reported.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill and a number of other bills of similar character have been amended in the committee, so as to make them conform in form to the common bills relating to bridges; and I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk in reporting the bill may report it as amended, so that the House may know what it contains instead of reading the long

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the bill as requested.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21402) permitting the building of a dam across the Savan-nah River at Gregg Shoals.

nah River at Gregg Shoals.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Savannah River Power Company, a corporation organized under the laws of South Carolina, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to construct and maintain a dam across the Savannah River, extending from a point in Elbert County, Ga., to a point in South Carolina near the dividing line between Anderson County, S. C., and Abbeville County, S. C., upon or in the vicinity of Gregg Shoals, and all works incident thereto in the utilization of the power thereby developed in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to amend or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Aiken, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAVENPORT WATER POWER COMPANY.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21677) to amend an act granting to the Davenport Water Power Company rights to construct and maintain a canal, power sta-tion, and appurtenant works in the Mississippi River in Scott County,

Be it enacted, etc., That the act granting to the Davenport Water Power Company rights to construct and maintain a canal, power station, and appurtenant works in the Mississippi River in Scott County, Iowa, approved April 5, 1904, be, and it is hereby, amended as follows: In section 3 of said act strike out the word "three" and insert the word "six" in lieu thereof; also strike out the word "six" and insert the word "nine" in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—my attention was called away for just a moment—I do not quite understand something about the dam and furnishing power.

Mr. MANN. It is merely extending the time. Mr. DAWSON. I will state to the gentleman it does not come under the classification of dam bills. It is a water-power canal. It extends the time for the construction of the same, and the company has shown all due diligence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There was a previous act of Congress giving them the power.

Mr. DAWSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. WILLIAMS. And this merely extends the time?
Mr. DAWSON. That is all.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the bill the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. DAWSON. It has, and has the recommendation of the Engineer Department.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed

On motion of Mr. Dawson, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS BLACK RIVER, ARKANSAS.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23578) to authorize the county of Clay, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Black River at or near Bennetts Ferry, in said county and State.

netts Ferry, in said county and State.

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Clay, one of the counties of the State of Arkansas, duly created and organized under the laws of said State, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto, across the Black River, at or near Bennetts Ferry, which is located on or near the south half of the north half of section 4, in township 20 north, range 5 east, in said county, in the State of Arkansas, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a page 1]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Macon, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FURNISHING CANNON TO THE STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 80.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 80) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish two 3-inch wrought-iron muzzle-loading cannon, with their carriages, limbers, and accessories, to the State of South Dakota.

limbers, and accessories, to the State of South Dakota.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to deliver to the State of South Dakota, if the same can be done without detriment to the public service, two 3-inch wrought-iron muzzle-loading cannon, now in South Dakota, with the carriages, limbers, and accessories belonging to them, to be the property of the said State: Provided, That the donation shall be without expense to the United States.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8, page 1, after the word "Provided," strike out the words "That the donation shall be without expense to the United States" and insert in lieu thereof the words "That no expense shall be incurred by the United States in the delivery of said cannon, carriage, and acces-

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 23821—the fortifications appropriation bill-with Mr. MANN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that a point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the point of order is insisted on this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa withdraw the point of order? Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The point of order has not been made

As far as I am concerned, I shall suband will not be made. mit the question to the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do I understand the gentleman to withdraw the point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes. I shall oppose the amend but shall not claim that it is subject to the point of order. I shall oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws the point of order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, after line 23, insert: "For the procurement of a site or sites in the Hawaiian Islands for forts and seacoast batteries, $100,000."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief. In the temper of this House with reference to doing things or not doing them, I presume there will be quite an opposition to preparing sites for seacoast defenses in the Hawaiian Islands. Last year we appropriated an insufficient amount for sites in the Hawaiian Islands, to wit, $150,000, to be expended in the present fiscal year. The estimates for sites to secure the purchase that are absolutely necessary for the erection of seacoast batteries and other defenses at Pearl Harbor and Honolulu for the coming fiscal year are $176,100. My belief is that the War Department ought to be given all of their estimates in order that they may complete the purchase of all the requisite sites for the purpose of making a perfect defense of Pearl Harbor and Honolulu. There was appropriated last year for seacoast batteries in the Hawaiian Islands the sum of $260,000, and it has been stated on the floor here by those who, I presume, know, that this has not been expended; and I have been informed that one reason is that they were waiting and expecting to have an adequate appropriation to procure the necessary and proper sites to expend the money upon.

This bill carries no appropriation whatever for a site for seacoast batteries in the Hawaiian Islands. We did not obtain the Hawaiian Islands as a result of the Spanish-American war, nor yet as an incident to that war. Proceedings were taken and continued through part of the Administration of Cleveland, and later on continued until by resolution of Congress, which, as I remember, bears date July 6, 1898, in the midst of the progress of the Spanish war, we obtained the Hawaiian Islands. We did not organize them into a separate Territory, giving them a Territorial government, until April 30, 1900, when this was done by an act of Congress bearing that date. Now, these islands are located in the Pacific Ocean. They are on the road to the Philippines. They are not as far west as a large portion of the Aleutian Islands, which are a part of Alaska obtained about forty years ago. The Hawaiian Islands are absolutely essential to us for the safety of our Pacific coast and our Alaskan possessions, to say nothing of the Philippine Islands. Therefore it does not come within any of the objections of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] about wanting to abandon them. We took them deliberately. They are not the result to us of the conquest of war. They are the result of careful annexation, with the approval of the Congress of the United States solemnly given by an act of law, and not through any treaty arrangement.

[The time of Mr. Keifer having expired, by unanimous consent, at his request, it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. As a member of the subcommittee that framed the bill and as a member of the whole committee, will the gentleman state why no appropriation was made for the purchase of sites in Hawaii?

Mr. KEIFER. You will have to ask that question of those who were opposed to it on the subcommittee. I was not one of those.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman certainly knows why it was not done.

Mr. KEIFER. I only know that the subcommittee and the committee refused to do it. I could not give any good reason at all. I know of none. Let me add, Mr. Chairman, that it is an absolute necessity that we should have an additional appropriation for sites for defenses in Hawaii. We have the $260,000, it is said, that was appropriated in the first session of this Congress yet to be expended, wholly, as it turned out in the law as printed, in the Hawaiian Islands, and it has not been expended for want of adequate appropriations for proper sites.

Now we propose in this bill to appropriate $600,000 more for seacoast defenses, to be expended in the Hawaiian and Philippine islands, and it is fair to assume that some portion of it, some substantial portion of the $600,000, is to be expended in preparing and building defenses for the Hawaiian Islands. ought to have, Mr. Chairman, sites for those defenses. All I fear is that if my amendment is adopted and the War Department is given $100,000 to be used in connection with the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, that it will be inadequate. I think this much can be given, and it would be used properly and economically, and we can expend the $260,000 already appropriated that has not been expended—appropriated at the last session-and such part as the War Department may decide to expend of the $600,000 that is carried in this bill, and these are my reasons for urging this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, last year the fortification bill carried $150,000 for sites in the Hawaiian Islands. shall now read to this committee the testimony of Colonel Abbot and General Mackenzie, with reference to the appropriation of additional money for that purpose, given this year before the subcommittee, and shall practically add nothing to that.

I read from the hearings:

Mr. SMITH. To what extent have you applied the appropriation we have given you to buy land for a Hawaiian site, or have you been brought to a standstill by reason of the exhaustion of your money? Colonel Abbot. We had been brought to a standstill when the act of June 25 gave us an additional $150,000.

Mr. SMITH. That is, have you been banking this money or spending it?

of June 25 gave us an additional $150,000.

Mr. Smith. That is, have you been banking this money or spending it?

Colonel Abbot. Not the last appropriation. We had spent all that we had received up to $150,000. The last has not been spent.

Mr. Smith. Why, in brief, has it not been spent?

Colonel Abbot. We have been waiting for the determination as to just where the best sites for the batteries should be. There has been some discussion on that matter, and we do not want to buy any further land until we find out exactly where we should go.

Mr. Smith. What have you to say as to whether the amount we have given you will not be sufficient to pick out and buy the land you require at a definite price, or within the next year?

Colonel Abbot. General Mackenzie can answer that better than I can, as he has been over there.

General Mackenzie. There is one piece of land which we undoubtedly will have to buy, and which a year ago was $25,000. Whether the price will vary very much from that I do not know. There is another piece of land where we have not yet succeeded in making an arrangement—that is, we have not got a price on it yet; but I think that with this amount we have we can pull through for the next year.

xt year.

Mr. SMITH. And it probably would not delay your work?

General Mackenzie. I think not, unless we have an unusual amount

Colonel Abbot. We have land enough now on which to sp $200,000 out of the $260,000, so that the land and the money are $200,000 out of the $250,000, so that the land and the money are on all fours.

Mr. SMITH. It might be well to buy the land fairly speedily, but from what I understand you have not located the land, nor have you a definite price on it.

Colonel ABBOT. There have been different opinions as to that mortarbattery site. There is quite a degree of variation that is possible and still have an effective position. As to just which is the best location there has been much discussion and a great deal of variance of opinion.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly. Mr. HEPBURN. To what locality does the testimony which the gentleman has just read apply?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. To Honolulu and Pearl Harbor.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is not on the general subject of the insular fortifications?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not at all. In other words, so far from being in want of money to buy sites on which to spend $260,000, the testimony is undisputed that the Department has enough land already bought and paid for to utilize all but $60,000 of the $260,000, and $150,000 money not spent for sites on which to spend $60,000 given them for seacoast batteries. And the testimony of General Mackenzie is that the failure to appropriate more will not delay construction unless they have an unusual amount of work. Instead of having no money to buy sites in the Hawaiian Islands, they now have $150,000 in bank that they have not spent, and there is no conceivable need for the appropriation of more money for sites when they have not determined where they are going to buy and have already substantially land enough on which to erect all the batteries provided for up to this hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Chief of Ordnance, in conducting manufacturing or similar operations, is authorized to charge any indirect or general expense for labor or material therefor against any of the appropriations authorizing these operations in such manner as is most economical and efficient, provided that the methods adopted shall show that each of such appropriations bears its ratable share of the total amount of these expenses.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order against this provision, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill one or two questions relating to it. In the first place, I would like to understand the scope of this legislation; what is the intent and purpose of it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa reserves the point of order to lines 17 to 24, page 8.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that but little can be furnished to the gentleman from Iowa upon this subject that is not contained in the Book of Estimates. At all of the arsenals of the United States work is being done under various appropriations. Some instruments for use in manufacture are utilized in the production of all these various classes: for example, a wheelbarrow at the Rock Island Arsenal, with which the gentleman is familiar, would be used in connection with much of the work under many items of appropriation contained in this or the Army or any other bill.

There is no separate item carried that covers these expenses; nor, is it desirable that such separate items be carried, because if you do, you do not have any idea of what a given branch of the service is costing. This provides that the expense of these things used in conducting the manufacturing establishment and utilized in connection with work under divers appropriations may be distributed equitably over the appropriations in the utilization of which these articles are necessary.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague whether or not the effect of this legislation would be to furnish more accurate information as to the exact cost of the manufacture of any article in an arsenal in the United States?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In my judgment it would furnish both a more and a less accurate estimate. It would furnish a really more accurate idea of what each article costs than any other system, because if we make a separate appropriation for machinery there would be no method of telling how much of that ought to be charged to any given article that was produced, but this requires that the proper amount, the equitable amount, be assessed to each appropriation to cover this general expense of manufacture.

Mr. DAWSON. The point I was getting at was this: The Chief of Ordnance, in the hearings, stated a fact which I have long known, that in the manufacture of articles in the arsenals of the United States the actual labor cost of the manufacture is first ascertained and then to that sum is added 40 per cent for the general expense of maintenance of the plant. I would like to know whether or not under this amendment the Chief of Ordnance will be able to determine the exact cost, we will say, of a gun carriage manufactured at the Rock Island Arsenal without the necessity of taking the labor charge and then adding to it 40 per cent for general expenses?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not say that any system will enable us to tell the exact cost of an article where we are manufacturing in the same place many different kinds of articles, because there are general expenses there that it is extremely difficult to tell what percentage of should be assigned to the different articles, so that I deem it utterly impossible, if in a factory you are producing articles of various kinds, under divers appropriations, to state with mathematical accuracy what each item costs; but I do think that the general tendency of this legislation will be to give a more accurate idea as to how much each article does cost.

Mr. DAWSON. The reason I make these inquiries is that I think it is important for the Government to know and for Congress to know, and I think it is important for the great Committee on Appropriations to know, whether or not these articles can be manufactured in our own arsenals at a less cost than they can be purchased by contract. As the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull stated to the House the other day, it cost the Government about 25 per cent more to buy metallic ammunition than it did to manufacture it in its own arsenals; and I would like to ask whether or not the Committee on Appropriations, having always in view the question of economy and the question of the careful expenditure of the appropriations, has ever gone into the question of whether or not it is more economical to manufacture these articles in the arsenals or more economical to purchase them by contract?

I would say that I think the evidence Mr. SMITH of Iowa. before the committee quite clearly shows that some articles are more cheaply bought than they are manufactured; that there are certain castings, certain shaped iron-things of that kindthat can be bought more cheaply than they can be manufac-tured. I think, generally speaking, it is cheaper for the Government to manufacture in the arsenals than it is to let the contract outside. That is partly due to the fact that in some lines there is at least something approaching a combination in bidding. In those lines, it seems to me, the Government ought to manufacture for itself. In other lines, where there is such competition as will insure fair bidding, it perhaps would be well, in a measure, to encourage the maintenance of reserve strength to produce these goods in time of war by letting the

Mr. DAWSON. As I understand the general policy of the War Department in letting out contracts for the manufacture of various articles, it is on the theory which has been adopted by foreign governments that it is wise to have certain private plants equipped with the necessary machinery for the manufacture of these goods in an emergency. Now, that being so, does that not of itself prove that these appropriations will not go so far if the money is expended in contracts as it would if they were manufactured in the arsenals? At Rock Island we have perhaps the most splendid manufacturing plant in the United States, ten splendid buildings and unsurpassed water power, complete, to furnish all of the power and all of the light for that great institution, the power being taken from the Mississippi River. There we have the plant; there we have the Does it not stand to reason that they can manufacture more cheaply in that establishment, which has already been built and which is already equipped, than they can purchase from a private establishment, when the effect of purchasing in a private establishment is to give them a sufficient profit to enable them to equip their manufacturing plants so as to be ready in an emergency?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, to reply to the questions of the gentleman would require that I enter upon a full discussion of all the questions involved in public ownership, and that he will not expect me to do. I am not one of those who believe that ordinarily a political body transacts business better than private individuals, and I do not believe that the Government ordinarily can manufacture or manage a business more cheaply than a private individual can, but it is necessary that we have some reserve productive power. That is, that we have a capacity to expand our production in time of emergency.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, right there—
Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Just pardon me a moment. It is not to be anticipated that private individuals will maintain this reserve. They can not be expected to maintain great idle manufactories to await the hour when this Government in its need calls for their services; therefore all reserve productive power we have in time of emergency must be Government power. must have Government plants having this reserve productive power for time of emergency, for we can not hope for private plants to maintain it.

Mr. DAWSON. As I understand it the theory of the Department is that the reserve power shall be lodged in private

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not at all, as I understand it. It is desired that factories be maintained for the production of those classes of goods, and then that the Government shall maintain also plants containing a large reserve power of production, these Government plants to accomplish two purpose one to supply the goods and determine whether we are being charged unreasonable prices by private producers, the other to have the ability for expansion in time of need, which no private capitalist can be expected to furnish.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I fear that my colleague has a misunderstanding of the basis upon which the policy of the War Department rests. As I understand it, one reason for the allotment of these large sums to contractors is with a view of enabling the contractors to keep their shops equipped for the manufacture of these particular articles, so that in case of an emergency these private plants will be ready, and we could go to them for an increased supply of these materials. But, Mr. Chairman, in my judgment that should not be a controlling reason. I know, and my colleague knows, that this particular plant of which I speak, the Rock Island Arsenal, is equipped, has the power and the buildings, so that it could increase its output fourfold, yes, sixfold, I think, upon short notice and without extra expense except for the labor.

But the point I want to get at, Mr. Chairman, is I want to ask my colleague in charge of the bill whether or not it is within the province of the Committee on Appropriations, in the future, perhaps, to make inquiry as to the expenditure of these appropriations and report to this House, or determine for themselves whether it is more economical to manufacture in the arsenals or purchase by contract. I believe they would find it good policy to increase the manufacture of ordnance and supplies at the arsenals.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is the policy of the Committee on Appropriations to ascertain in as full a degree as possible the manner in which the money appropriated by Congress has been I can not quite agree with the gentleman. If we transfer all the work to the arsenals and run them at their full capacity and leave nothing to be done outside, then certainly all the factories outside will not be maintained, and the arsenals will have no capacity for increasing their output in time of emergency, and you will then have no reserve power of production, private or public; and it is only by maintaining this reserve largely at the arsenals that we can have any reserve of that kind at all, because it can not be anticipated that these private capitalists will permanently maintain plants of two or three or four times the capacity of the work that they have to do, and it is the duty of the Government to maintain for itself this capacity for increased production in time of need.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with the gentleman as to the necessity of this reserve power of production in an emergency, but in my view we could now have practically all this ordnance manufactured in Government plants and we would still have in those plants the capacity for a large increase in case the emergency should arise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the gentleman insist upon or withdraw his point of order?

Mr. DAWSON. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 2 of act of Congress approved March 19, 1892, authorizing the Secretary of War to issue, on the requisition of the governor of a State bordering on the sea or Gulf coast, and having a permanent camping ground for the encampment of the militia not less than six days annually, two heavy guns and four mortars, with carriages and platforms, for their instruction, and for the construction of a suitable battery for the cannon so issued, and appropriating $5,000 for each State to carry out the above-mentioned objects, is hereby repealed.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon the paragraph.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that by a clerical error in fixing the date of this law, in the estimate sent down a mistake was made in the draft of the section, and this is merely to perfect it, and if the gentleman from New York will withhold his point until that can be done I will be gratified.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] desire to have his amendment read for information?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman from New York desires to withhold his point of order long enough to perfect the section. Can not that be done by unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the section without impairing the right of any Member to make a point of order after the amendment.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask, as a parliamentary inquiry, if that amendment is adopted will it still be in time to make a point of order against the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] is that he may be permitted to offer an amendment to the paragraph without barring the right of any Member of the committee to make a point of order upon the paragraph as perfected, whether the amendment be adopted or otherwise. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, in lines 25 and 26, strike out the words "March nineteenth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two" and insert in lieu thereof the words "May nineteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr.

Bennet] reserves a point of order upon the paragraph as

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if the seven States that have received cannon under this act ought not to be protected in their right, and if he does not think it a little bit unsafe to put in a loophcle provision without a saving clause?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, having some doubt about that question I caused a telegram to be sent to General Crozier, the Chief of Ordnance, to know what the interpretation of the War Department would be of this section, and I have in my hand the telegram in reply, dated January 11, 1907, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, January 11, 1907.

Hon. J. C. Courts, Clerk of Appropriation Committee, House:

Replying to your telegram of this date, the repeal of section 2 of the act authorizing issue of heavy guns and mortars to seaboard States will not in any way effect the retentions by the States of guns and mortars already issued.

mortars already issued.

When any State no longer needs the guns and mortars issued to it on account of their obsolete character, they are condemned by a surveying officer of the organized militia of the State, sold by the authority of the Secretary of War, and the proceeds covered into the United States Treasury. This has already occurred in the case of one

So that this repealing clause would have no effect upon any State that has this existing equipment until it became so obsolete as to become worthless, and condemned, not by the Federal Government, but condemned by the State militia. I see no necessity for the saving clause. I think that the States are fully protected during the lifetime of what they have now received, and, of course, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Ben-NET] will not think that these States ought to hereafter be given preferential rights over the other States in the renewal of their supplies.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that. I think that having gone to the expense and trouble, and giving the land and everything for fitting up these places for the guns, and having taken them in good faith, they ought to be protected in their ownership of the guns.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They are protected, as General Crozier states, and I rely upon his judgment on this subject.

Mr. BENNET of New York. He is not a lawyer, is he? Mr. SMITH of Iowa. He is a better lawyer than a great many gentlemen who have certificates to practice, I will say.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is possibly true. But what harm would a saving clause do?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Because a saving clause has never been presented to the committee, although this matter has been public for some time. We have not had time to consider such a saving clause or submit it to the Department as to its legal effect in its judgment. I feel confident, in the face of this assurance, that the gentleman can rest sure that the great State he represents will not be interfered with in the possession of these batteries.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I think without the exception I would accept

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would not consent to an exception. I would rather consent that it go out on the point of order.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I make the point of order that it changes existing law.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The point of order is well taken, Mr.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clers read as follows:

That all material purchased under the foregoing provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judg-ment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad, which material shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, as I caught the reading of that paragraph the Government of the United States was given some sort of right or some conditional privilege to use something about a gun, I believe, if patented by an Army or a Navy officer.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I take it that the gentleman is alluding to another paragraph that was read before this paragraph.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I waited until the Clerk got through reading the paragraph to inquire. I have no bill.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If you refer to the second provision prior to the close of the bill, I will state that the language used is the language that has been carried for several years past, and it is not new language. It is intended to protect the United States in the use of these matters that it investigates, whether patented or otherwise.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does it cover a case where an Army officer or a Navy officer in the line of duty is directed to do something of a certain kind, and in doing so discovers something and takes out a patent therefor in his own name?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is so intended.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does it give him the right to claim it as his property or the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Neither. It provides that if Government money shall be expended in the construction or test of any gun or implements under the supervision of the Board the United States shall have the lawful right to the use of the inventions involved in the constructions. How fully it is covered I do not know, but that language has been carried for many years.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman for the information. Continuing some remarks of yesterday that I have made on that line, I desire to say this morning I sent a telegram to Secretary Metcalf to know something about this smokeless-powder patent. If the committee will indulge me a few moments, I will give it some information I have obtained in the shape of telegrams. I said yesterday, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Munroe patented the smokeless-powder process, and therefore he must have been the first man to discover it. I also read from a Senate hearing a statement made by the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. Perkins] to this effect:

In this connection I wish to state that Professer Munroe, now connected with the chair of chemistry in Columbia College, discovered smokeless powder when in the Naval Academy, filling the chair of chemistry there, and he felt that the invention belonged to the Government, and it was placed by him at the disposal of the Government.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] was asked yesterday about, and very kindly placed in the Record, copies of two other patents, it seems, upon the same subject, taken out by Mr. John B. Bernadou. They do not state, and no one has stated, what his position was at the time of taking out the patent nor what he was doing when he discovered the thing that he patented. So I sent a telegram this morning in the following language to the Secretary of the Navy:

January 16, 1907.

SECRETARY NAVY, City:

Please wire me, House Representatives, whether John B. Bernadou was in the Navy in any capacity. If so, what, when he patented a smokeless powder, process Nos. 673377 and 652455, in 1900 and 1901. See Record of yesterday (15th), pages 1185-1186. If not employed in Navy, what was his business in the years named and what now? Please reply immediately.

To that telegram I have just received this reply:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 16, 1907.

To JOHN W. GAINES, House:

Replying your telegram, John B. Bernadou was a commissioned offi-cer of the Navy at time of taking out smokeless-powder patents re-ferred to. He is still in the service.

V. H. METCALF, Secretary. I also, Mr. Chairman, called by telephone the Patent Commissioner this morning, and asked the Commissioner to send a copy of the patent issued to Mr. Munroe, which I have received since I got on my feet to make these remarks. I will read a portion of it so that we can see, if possible, whether the patent was given to him as an individual or the United States Patent Office. Charles E. Munroe, of Newport, R. I. Explosive powder and process of making same. Specification forming part of Letters Patent No. 489,684, dated January 10, 1893. Application filed August 14, 1891. Serial No. 402,645. (No specimens.)

mens.)

To all whom it may concern:

Be it known that I, Charles E, Munroe, a citizen of the United States, residing at the Naval Torpedo Station, at Newport, in the State of Rhode Island, have invented a certain new and useful Improvement in Explosive Powder and the Manufacture Thereof, of which the following is a specification.

The object of my invention is to produce a powder for use as a propellant in fire-arms, which shall be capable of giving a high velocity to the projectile without the production of a dangerous pressure in the barrel of the gun, and without the production of smoke to any serious extent, and which is incapable of being exploded with detonation. To accomplish this I make use of gun cotton, and, preferably, I first purify the same by the method set forth in my application of even date herewith, namely, exposure to the action of a solvent such as methyl alcohol which acts upon the lower cellulose nitrates (that is to say, those which are capable of being dissolved by such a solvent) and other soluble products of nitration, but not upon the higher nitrates (that is, such as are not materially affected by a solvent of this character) to any material extent, and which by percolation through the gun-cotton removes the soluble portions. I thus obtain a uniform material instead of one containing a variable and uncertain quantity of the lower nitrates, and therefore having an uncertain value as an explosive, as has been the case with the gun cotton heretofore employed for military purposes. I mix this material with nitro-benzene, the same being incorporated thoroughly with the gun cotton in a mill or between rolls, so that the gun cotton is acted upon throughout by the nitro-benzene and by which, preferably, it is shaped into sheets. The material, which is now of a plastic, coherent and homogeneous character, is then preferably out, molded, rolled or otherwise formed into strips, grains, wires or other forms, the size and form given to the material being varied according to the use to which it is

It is exposed to the air, and which is capable of being indurated or converted into a hard, horny product by the process hereinafter described it to the process hereinafter described it being the process hereinafter described it being the process hereinafter described it being the process hereinafter described in the process hereinafter described to the use of such material, for I consider the use of any agent by which the gun cotton may be converted into a material of sufficient plasticity to enable the thorough incorporation of the colloidizing agent to be effected, and which retains its plasticity ration as hereinafter described to be within the scope of my invention. I prefer to use from about nine-tenths to about one and eight-tenths parts of nitro-benzene to one part of gun-cotton. I may mix with the material suitable oxidizing salis to perfect combustion; the kind and which the product is to be put as will be understood.

I now indurate the material by the action of heated liquids or the vapors thereof. I prefer to employ water or steam or both. I have discovered that nitrated cilulose after being colloidized in the manner described by me, if treated by hot liquid or vapor, becomes indurated and like substances, and by so treating the colloidized material I obtain a substance of much density, great toughness, very close grained texture, great superficial hardness and smoothness, which is insoluble in water and completely resists disintegration thereby. The material is also incapable of being exploided by detonation, but inurs with sent rapidity but the presence of smoke to any material extent.

Any suitable method and apparatus for applying the heated liquid or vapor may be employed. For instance, the material may be placed in a which also the heated steam or vapor is caused to pass. The time of exposure to the liquid depends upon the degree of subdivision of the material. For instance, the small grains best adapted to use with small arms require the conditions as to temperature, pressure, and other matt

This specification signed and witnessed this 12th day of August, 1891.

CHARLES E. MUNROE.

Witnesses:
WM. CROOKE,
G. W. PATTERSON.

It seems the patent was given directly to him, and not the Government or to him in trust for the Government.

Senator Perkins, as I have shown, says he (Mr. Munroe) thought the patent "belonged to the Government" and turned it over to the Government because Munroe discovered it while as an officer he was working in the line of his duty at the Naval Academy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I read yesterday from the Supreme Court decision that when an officer, directed in his line of duty to investigate a subject, when he takes Government machinery, Government money, Government time, and does investigate, and in the course of his investigations discovers something for which he takes out a patent, that patent belongs to the Government of the United States. That is the Gill case and that is the Solomon case. Mr. Justice Brown wrote the opinion in the Gill case and Mr. Justice Brewer in the Solomon case. Now, what is the Government's condition to-day as to this powder? No one can doubt that the Government owns the Munroe patent. It is the parent patent. Mr. Munroe, as he should have done. turned his patent over to the Government, and yet his patent is to-day in the hands of this great powder monopoly, and the Government is in the throes of that monopoly.

But how about Mr. Bernadou? I do not know the immediate circumstances under which he "discovered" his smokelesspowder process, but he certainly did not turn the patent over to the Government, so far as I have been advised. I have not been able to find any evidence in any report that he turned his patent over to the Government, as Mr. Munroe did; but it seems the Government only has a free "permit" to use the patent, though it at least owns the Munroe patent.

I am sorry to say that this great monopoly, the Du Pont con-cern, that the Senate has been investigating, fruitlessly, so far as I know, is in possession of all these patents, and we are appropriating money-a proposition which I have voted for and am going to vote for, as I have been doing since the Fifty-fifth or Fifty-sixth Congress-for a Government powder factory, to get ourselves out of the throes of this monopoly, aided by our Munroe patent, which we own, and may own-or should-the other Here we are to-day with no statute to control this matter, no provision in this bill to curtail the embarrassment that has been brought about by these Federal officials, whether intentionally or not. I charge no bad faith on their part; but there is no statute that I know anything about

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman kindly enlighten the committee as to what legislation could have been put upon this bill, unless it might have been additional appropriations for additional powder plants, that would have had any effect whatever upon this subject?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the gentleman could have embodied a provision in this bill to cover the case. It might have been subject to a point of order, but I dare say no one would have objected to it, because it would be a proper reform. It would save money to the people. It would tend to remove the embarrassment wrought by this monopoly.

What was the provision that the gen-Mr. SMITH of Iowa.

tleman was going to put in?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Something like the one recommended by Secretary Herbert ten or twelve or fifteen years ago in a report a copy of which I had before me yesterday, or something like the one that Senator Chandler, chairman of that Senate committee, reported as a result of the testimony taken before him. We could even improve on them.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Would the gentleman kindly state the substance of the legislation he refers to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If I can get in time from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] this report which I gave him yesterday, I will read the proposed bills suggested by Secretary Herbert and possibly others. We should go further than this bill goes. We should stop the sale or use of these patents by foreign governments.

Mr. LACEY. I think you gave it to us yesterday, Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; I alluded to such sales and uses. I will get the report from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and read it later if I get a chance. The British Government has a provision similar to this bill. Mr. Herbert conferred with British officials on the subject. But the point I want to make is this, Mr. Chairman: The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Herburn] yesterday alluded to the fact that these naval officers, perhaps not intending to embarrass the Government in time of war or peace, have put these patents in the hands of monopolies, and many have put them in the hands of foreigners. Certainly the latter can be done, but should not be allowed.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I should like to ask the gentleman if the Government has not the use of those patents?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is true, a mere "permit;" but the Government owns them, or at least owns the Munroe patent.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Has the Government paid anything for the use of the patents?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand not.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. The Government has paid noth-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No. The naval officer, Mr. Mun-roe, turned his patent to the Government as its own property, roe, turned his patent to the Government as its own property, while the other inventor, it seems, said, "I will let the Government of the United States use my patent." But it seems the Government has only a license, a gift, a permit to use them, exercise no ownership, although it owns the Munroe patent. What has it cost the Government? Let us see. It has given the inventors the education. It has given them the money. It has given them the time. It has given them the machinery to discover with, and then gave them the patents. The Government in return has only permits—exercises no control other-wise. Now, these patents have gone into the hands of for-eigners. They have "permits" to use, I suppose, so that when we go to fight the great battles of this country—which I trust God we shall never have the necessity to fight—we must meet this smokeless powder made by the Munroe and Bernadou patents, invented by officers of the Army and Navy; hence I protest to-day against that kind of practice.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to find out, because I have not given very close attention to that, when these patents which the gentleman speaks of will expire, or have they expired?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; the Munroe patent was issued on the 12th of August, 1891, and the other two were issued within the last two years, I think.

Mr. KEIFER. So recent as that?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; about then. The gentleman will find the date at pages 1185 and 1186 of yesterday's Record. No one wants to curtail the ambition of a naval officer, but Congress should regulate these practices.

Let me tell you another thing. You will read in the Chandler report that officers have retired under very questionable circumstances, which are commented upon by that gallant statesman of wasp-like intellectuality, Senator Chandler, and gone into foreign lands, peddling out their patents, or patents in which they became interested, for improved Army machinery and naval machinery, and sold the rights and privileges, with strings tied to them, I presume, to foreign governments. I say in all seriousness, without intending to impugn anyone's motives, that this matter is one that must be dealt with by this Government.

Mr. BURLESON. Were these men educated at the expense of the Government?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; every one of them.

Mr. PRINCE. Are they on the retired list and drawing large pay as retired officers?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I can't say about Mr. Munroe or Mr. Bernadou. I refer to the gentleman alluded to by Mr. Chandler in his report, who had been retired or given a "leave of absence" at his request, and during this "leave" drew pay at $2,500 or $3,000 per year, as in such cases was provided.

These are all unpleasant subjects to discuss, but that should not deter us from doing our duty and remedying these evils.

I am grateful to the committee for its courtesy. My time is about consumed.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to; so the committee determined to rise, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Mann, Chaisman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 23821) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

H. J. Res. 214. An act to provide for the printing of 16,000 copies of Senate Document No. 144, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. R. 81. Joint resolution authorizing temporary leaves of absence for homestead settlers.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICUL-TURE.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture be authorized to sit during the sittings of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if he expects to make a report during this session of Congress?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. We shall make a report if we succeed in completing the investigation that we are now making. We have had half a dozen sessions and developed about 1,500 pages of testimony when it is printed. We will make the report as soon as we can get at it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I want to express the hope that other committees on expenditures in the Departments will follow the good example of the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is something, of course, with which we have nothing to do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER, IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23560) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River between Benton and Franklin counties, in the State of Washington, by the North Coast Railroad Company.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS COLUMBIA RIVER.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23561) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River between Wallawalla and Benton counties, in the State of Washington, by the North Coast Railroad Company, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the North Coast Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Washington, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River from some convenient and practical point, to be selected, on the east bank of said river in Wallawalla County to some convenient and practical point on the west bank of said river in Benton County, in the State of Washington, for the passage of railroad trains and, at the option of said company or corporation, its successors and assigns, for the safe and convenient passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, animals, and foot passengers, at such reasonable rates of toll as may be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all of line 11, page 1, after the word "Washington," and on page 2 strike out lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and the words "of War" in line 5. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Thre was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Jones of Washington, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ELEVATOR AND GRAIN-BUYING BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the Senate concurrent resolution 36, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 36.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 36.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring),
That there be printed for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives 3,000 copies of the testimony taken in the investigation pursuant to Senate resolution of June 25, 1906, directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make a thorough investigation of the elevator and grain buying and forwarding business of this country to determine to what extent special favors have been granted to them by railroad companies, the influence which the alleged monopolizing of this branch of business has had upon the market, the injury it has worked to the grain producers, the extent to which the railroads, their officers, directors, stockholders, and employees own or control the grain-buying and grain-forwarding companies, and the manner in which these railroads, their officers, directors, stockholders, and employees secured holdings, if any, in these grain buying, storing, and forwarding companies, and to report the same to the Congress at its next session, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives. Representatives

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the Senate resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24103) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided between the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] on behalf of the minority and myself on behalf of the majority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, pending a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be controlled by himself one-half of the time and one-half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson]. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. MANN in the chair.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I shall occupy the attention of the House a very few minutes in explaining the general features of this bill. There is never much in the District of Columbla appropriation, of course, which is of general interest to the House, but I think there is quite as little as usual in this particular bill. The question of the finances of the District I this is that, although this is a city of broad streets, jet the think I ought to touch upon. This bill carries an appropriation of about $10,000,000. That is $200,000 less than the appropriation last year, but the committee can not properly claim that it has economized to that extent. On the contrary, we must admit that the appropriations this year for the current expenses of the District are much larger than they were last year, and this apparent reduction comes from the fact that the extraordinary expenses which have been consuming so large a portion of the District revenues for the last five years are approaching their completion. We have undertaken within the last few years several very large projects, which under the ordinary custom of municipalities would be paid for by the issue of bonds. There was the sewage-disposal system, for instance, which took about $5,000,000. There was the Union Station, with the changes of grades connected with it, which also took about $5,000,000. There was the new municipal building, which took two millions and a half, and there was the new filtration plant, which took about three millions.

Then, there was the highway bridge across the Potomac, which took $1,200,000, and there was the Connecticut Avenue Bridge, which took about $800,000, making in all a total of some seventeen or eighteen millions of dollars of what would be called permanent improvements, which would ordinarily be paid for by bonds, but which we have paid for as far as possible as current expenses. Naturally it was impossible for the District to pay all of these out of its income. So the plan was evolved that our partner in District business, the United States Government, which pays one-half of all the expenses of the District, should pay its half of all these current expenses outright and then should advance to the District money sufficient to pay the District's half of these current expenses, without any bonds and upon payment of 2 per cent annual interest. That has been carried on now for several years, and there is now due the United States for these advances nearly $3,000,000. These extraordinary expenses, however, have come to a completion, with the exception of about $550,000 which come into this year's bill and which will complete the municipal building, and with the exception of about $800,000 which is still due upon the Union Station.

So that after this year's bill, which appropriates the $550,000. there will be only about $800,000 which will in the future be due upon extraordinary expenses, unless, of course, Congress should decide that we should undertake some new improvement. Consequently we can hope very soon to begin to pay off this $3,000,000, and, in fact, the bill this year, if it shall not be increased in the Senate, will have a balance of about $600,000 toward decreasing that sum which is due the General Government, and at that rate in four or five years we could expect to pay off what might be called our "floating indebtedness" and once more be solvent and ready to expend all our income upon the current expenses of the government. There is besides this a permanent debt of about $11,000,000 for which bonds were issued some thirty years ago and which is gradually in the process of extinction. Now, in our appropriations this year we have thought that the streets of the city were in such condition that they justified and demanded a large appropriation, and therefore we have appropriated $300,000 for the permanent repairs of the streets, the full sum that is asked for by the Commissioners. We have also very much increased the expenditure for school buildings, because the buildings are crowded. The compulsory-education bill which was passed at the last session of Congress necessarily largely increased the number of scholars, and therefore we have appropriated over $500,000 for new schoolhouses; and the expenses for the schools, paying schoolteachers, for the police, and for the fire department are all necessarily much larger than this year because of the legislation which was passed last year increasing salaries.

There is only one other item which I think is of such interest or might excite such difference of opinion that I feel I ought to state it to the committee, and that is the appropriation we have made of $75,000 for the purchase in three different parts of the city of three playgrounds. This playground question is one which has recently come to the fore in large cities in connection with the education of children. It is a question which personally I have not had much sympathy with, but I find that the persons who have most studied the subject, and for whose opinions I have most respect, are thoroughly in favor of public playgrounds, and arguments were advanced sufficient to convince me that it was wise we should make this appropriation. We appropriated for one lot of land in Georgetown, which will cost about $25,000 and which has about 2 acres, for a plat of land in the northeast section of the city which has about 3 acres and which will cost about $30,000, and for a tract of about 1 acre in the southwest section of the city which will cost about $20,000. The theory upon which we recommend police regulations do not allow the children to play ball or indulge in sports on the street, and, moreover, we felt that the streets are not the proper place for the children to take their outdoor exercise, and if without disproportionate expense we can provide the school children a place where they can be in the open air for healthful exercise I consider it to be an advantage to their health, their morals, and probably their studies; also to give them this outing. When the items of the bill are read of course they will be open for discussion, and unless there is information anyone desires, I have nothing more I care to suggest in general debate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to ask the gentleman some questions.

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly. Mr. JOHNSON. Does the gentleman know what the water plant in the city of Washington cost?

Mr. GILLETT. What it cost originally?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. No; I can not give the gentleman that figure. I can easily ascertain it, but I do not carry it in my

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I looked into the hearings for those figures and could not find them. Is it true that it takes all the revenues derived from the water department to pay the expenses of operating that plant?

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, no; it does not take nearly all, but there has been a provision in the bill for a number of years that the balance of receipts over expenses can be applied to the extension of what is called the "high-service system," and each year a large sum is from this revenue appropriated to extend the service. I think in the last ten years about $2,000,000 have been paid from the revenues and appropriated to the extension of the system.

Mr. JOHNSON. How long will it be under this plan under which you are operating before the system will be complete?

Mr. GILLETT. It depends on how fast the city grows, of course. If the city had remained stationary, it would have been completed long before this, but if the city keeps growing, of course our water system has got to keep growing propor-

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the gentleman know how the water rates in Washington compare with the water rates in other cities of similar size?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I can not tell the gentleman that ex-It came up last year. I remember the rates were low.

but the figures I do not remember from last year.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to ask the gentleman another question in regard to another matter, namely, in regard to the playgrounds. Does the gentleman think that the same reason that has brought about the purchase of playgrounds in cities like New York and Chicago, where streets are narrow and crowded, apply to a city the half of which is already in parks and open spaces?

Mr. GILLETT. I recognize that Washington does not need it nearly as much as these large congested cities. Washington, of course, is a city of broad streets and of parks, but of course these little parks are not really playgrounds for children, except the very small children, who can just walk around with their nurses. And in the places where we have located these playgrounds, in Georgetown, in the southwest, and in the northeast, there are no playgrounds of any size near the spots which we have selected.

Mr. PARSONS. No parks?

Mr. GILLETT. No parks. There is one in the southwest, but it is a very small one.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is the land that is to be purchased for the purpose of playgrounds reasonably worth on the market the prices that it is expected to pay?

Mr. GILLETT. We were informed that they were very good investments, and with me that weighed something. Although it is hardly proper to ever say that land is a good investment for a city, because, of course, we are never going to sell it, but if they were abandoned as playgrounds, they would be useful for buildings.

Mr. JOHNSON. Of course, it is only a question of whether it will be dearer later.

Mr. GILLETT. I think it will be very much dearer. The one we got in Georgetown is an old cemetery. It is right in the midst of the thickly grown part of the city. As the gentle-man knows, there are no parks there to speak of. This is an old cemetery which the church is willing to sell and which we are told we are getting at a very reasonable price. And the other lots we were convinced were excellent purchases.

Mr. JOHNSON. Another thing I want to ask the gentleman about. Did the committee look into the cost of lighting this city as compared to what other cities of equal size were paying?

Mr. GILLETT. The committee were rather forestalled this year, to their surprise, in doing that, because by a provision which was put into the bill before I was on the committee there is authority given to the District Commissioners to make a three year's contract for lighting, which has never been exercised before; but this year, on the 1st of July last, the District Com-missioners made a three year's contract for all the gas lamps, and consequently we have nothing to do except to appropriate. They had that authority. They have made a very much better contract, however, I will say, than they have ever been able to make before, and they have no flat-flame gas-burners now, but they are all mantel flames, which give a very much better light, and they have secured a price which is very much lower than they had ever secured before, and lower than they told us last year was possible.

Mr. JOHNSON. They are asking for authority to make a three year's contract in regard to other lights, are they not?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know. They have not asked our committee; at least I do not remember that they asked it. If they did, it was not granted.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understood they wanted to make a threeyear contract with the arc-light people.

Mr. GILLETT. Perhaps they did. It was not granted, if they asked it.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.
Mr. PRINCE. I think the gentleman stated the committee had favored a plan of paying out of the Treasury the half of the expenses of making certain improvements in the District of Columbia, and hit upon a plan of advancing the half that the District should pay, and that the District in turn should repay to the Treasury the amount advanced, with an annual interest of 2 per cent. How long has this practice been in operation?

Mr. GILLETT. It was adopted in 1901, at the time these large permanent improvements were entered upon.

Mr. PRINCE. Is there any sinking fund created out of which this money can be repaid?

Mr. GILLETT. No; it is paid right back to the Treasury each year out of the surplus there is at the end of the year from the appropriations. It is applied to the payment of the debt.

Mr. PRINCE. If there should be no surplus, then there is nothing applied?

Mr. GILLETT. There is nothing applied.

Mr. PRINCE. If there is a deficiency, then we will have to

Mr. GILLETT. The debt is increased so much. vided, I will say to the gentleman, in the original bill, and has been carried so ever since, that they shall be made up in five years. But the gentleman sees that five years have already gone by and it has not been paid.

Mr. PRINCE. It started in 1901 and this is 1907, and it is not made up. How much balance is there behind unpaid?

Mr. GILLETT. About $2,900,000, and at the end of the year there will practically be $3,000,000.

Mr. PRINCE. Has the interest been paid promptly?
Mr. GILLETT. Oh, the United States helps itself to the interest. The money is all in the Treasury, and the United States helps itself to the interest out of the annual receipts of the District.

Mr. PRINCE. In advance, or after the current expenses have been paid and there is a surplus?

Mr. GILLETT. Not in advance.
Mr. PRINCE. If there is a surplus, it pays itself the interest. Mr. GILLETT. It pays itself the interest anyway; and then, if there is no surplus, as has been the case for several years, it has that as a deficiency, and the debt already due is increased

Mr. PRINCE. In making up the deficiency, in making up the budget for the ensuing year, do you take into consideration the fact that they are behind in interest and in principal?

Mr. GILLETT. We are never behind in interest.
Mr. PRINCE. But we are behind in principal.
Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.
Mr. PRINCE. In making up that does the Government pay half and in that way whittle it down and eventually pay it itself?

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, no; the Government does not pay any part of this. The District pays this full indebtedness, interest and all.

Mr. PRINCE. Then, as I understand, you have no security other than the surplus? Mr. GILLETT. Why, the Government has perfect security.

The Government pays itself. The Government is making the appropriation, and the Government can help itself any time it please

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly. By making larger appropriations?

Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. PRINCE. And having a surplus?

Mr. GILLETT. The smaller appropriation made-

Mr. PRINCE. And in order to have a surplus the Government would make a larger appropriation?

Mr. GILLETT. The smaller the appropriation to current expenses

Mr. PRINCE. Would make a surplus?
Mr. GILLETT. Would make a large surplus.
Mr. PRINCE. In what way?
Mr. GILLETT. The less we appropriate for expenses the arger the surplus. If our revenues are $11,000,000 and we larger the surplus. only appropriate $8,000,000 to current expenses, that leaves a surplus of $3,000,000.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; I see that.

Mr. GILLETT. This year we leave a surplus of about half -$600,000. a million dollars-

Mr. PRINCE. Now, asking you of the working of this arrangement, in your opinion, do you think it wise for the Government to lend its money to cities and take security and receive therefor an annual interest of 2 per cent?

Oh, no; I do not think it should be done Mr. GILLETT.

with any other city.

Mr. PRINCE. That is what we are doing for the District of Columbia.

Mr. GILLETT. Why, of course, the Government is a partner of the District. And, moreover, as the gentleman under-

Mr. JOHNSON. A very generous arrangement. Mr. GILLETT. Very. This year we make an appropriation for these permanent improvements for the District of Columbia of only $550,000, and they ought to be paid for in about six

Mr. PRINCE. The only criticism I have of the scheme is that it does not work. It was proposed to work out in five years, but instead of doing so there is an indebtedness from the District to the General Government in the neighborhood of $3,000. 000. It is a good deal like stepping up one step and slipping back two.

Mr. GILLETT. It is not my province to defend that original provision, for I had nothing to do with it; but I do not think it is fairly subject to the criticism the gentleman makes, for this reason, that when it started it was not supposed that so many of these very large permanent improvements would be indulged in. But year by year we have gone on and undertaken one by one these very large and expensive permanent improve-ments. At the same time, as I say now, we are entirely at the end of them, and unless Congress decides to go into some other similar large permanent improvements, if we keep on at the same rate, there will be a large sum every year to reduce this Last year we reduced it about half a million dollars, and we will do as well or better this year.

BANNON. Mr. Chairman, have options been secured upon these different tracts of land which are proposed to be used for playgrounds?

Mr. GILLETT. No; we do not limit them to any particular spot, so if the price is put up on us, the Commissioners are not obliged to take that land.

Mr. BANNON. Then the three tracts that the gentleman mentioned will not necessarily be the ones that may be purchased if the appropriation is made?

Mr. GILLETT. Not necessarily, because if the price is raised to an unreasonable figure, the Commissioners would not buy the land.

Mr. BANNON. Are the Commissioners of the opinion that the prices set on this land are reasonable prices?

Mr. GILLETT. They thought they were very reasonable. Mr. BANNON. Were any affidavits or appraisements submitted to the Commissioners or by them?

Mr. GILLETT. Not submitted by them.
Mr. BANNON. Do I understand this cemetery that it is contemplated to purchase for a playground has been used as a burying ground?

Mr. GILLETT. Not for a great many years. It is an old disused burying ground belonging to a church.

In the event that the Government should Mr. BANNON. buy the title to that cemetery from the church, which, I presume, would have to be done under court proceedings, might there not be some claims set up by the families of those buried there for certain rights in this burying ground?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think so. They have told us that we could get a clear title.

Mr. BANNON. Against all persons whatsoever?

Mr. GILLETT.

Against everybody. N. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to Mr. BURLESON. discuss the details of this bill. If I felt so inclined, it would be unnecessary to do so after the very clear and comprehensive statement which has been submitted to the committee by the gentleman who so ably presides over the subcommittee which had charge of its preparation.

I do desire, however, to submit to this committee a few thoughts which occurred to me during the time the subcommittee was engaged in the preparation of this measure, and I offer these suggestions with diffidence to the gentlemen who compose the District Committee and who are directly chargeable with the responsibility of suggesting legislation in the interest of the District of Columbia.

Mr. Chairman, in the early days, while the Continental Congress was holding its sessions in the city of Philadelphia, it was so persistently and constantly annoyed by the actions of an organized mob which assembled near the house where the Congress was assembled that it was compelled to adjourn and take refuge in an adjoining State.

It is believed that these facts were fresh in the recollection of the fathers when they were called together to frame the Constitution (the Constitutional Convention consisting largely of members who constituted the First Congress), and they embodied in the organic law a provision that 10 square miles, to be ceded by certain States, should become the seat of government, over which the Congress should "exercise exclusive legislative jurisdiction in all cases whatsoever." To this section in the first article of the Constitution we look for our authority to legislate for the capital city. By its terms the grant of power to legislate is as broad and sweeping as language can make it. exclusive authority to legislate for the District of Columbia carries with it, of course, the responsibility which the Congress ought not to evade-to devise for the District the very best government possible.

Since the seat of the National Government was established here many plans for the government of this District have been suggested and several tried. For nearly three-quarters of a century the affairs of the municipality, if I might so term it, were administered by direct legislation on the part of Congress, at the end of which time the bonded indebtedness of the city aggregated in amount a little in excess of $3,000,000. At that time, in 1870, the amount necessary to meet the current expenses of the city was about $2,000,000, and approximately this amount was carried in the appropriation bills to meet this purpose.

In February, 1871, after the enfranchisement of the negro another system of government for Washington City was devised by the Congress. Provision was made for a governor, a board of public works with defined powers, and a legislative assembly. I will not at this time attempt a characterization of the government given the taxpayers of this District, and under this plan, but suffice it to say that at the end of a little more than three years the bonded indebtedness of this city had been increased to a degree without a parallel in the history of the civilized world. When its bonded indebtedness had reached a sum in excess of $23,000,000, the Congress, which was, of course, responsible for the form of government under which this great increase had been brought about, was confronted with the necessity of doing something. The air was filled with rumors of the corruption, the rottenness and thievery of those who were in charge of the city's affairs. The taxpayer was helpless. No honest man would undertake to defend what had taken place; in fact, no one could be found who would even attempt a justification of the continued existence of such a government, and, in a moment of desperation, the Congress wiped it out completely—abolished it—and provided for the government of the District by three Commissioners, declaring at the time that it was a temporary expedient-only a temporary plan. This was in 1874, and at the time this action was taken a select committee consisting of members of both parties was appointed for the purpose of giving careful consideration to the subject-matter and reporting back to the Congress a permanent system of government for the District of Columbia.

This select committee considered the matter for four years before it brought before the Congress the fruit of its labors. its first report provision was again made for a representative government or a legislative assembly for the District of Columbia. For reasons which it is now unnecessary to discuss the bill met with an overwhelming defeat. It was recommended that the three Commissioners be selected in this way: One, the Engineer Commissioner, to be named by the President, one to be elected by the Members of the House, and the other to be elected by the Senators. After much discussion this recommendation was rejected, and finally the Congress, vested as it is with the exclusive right of legislation within this territory, and therefore chargeable under the Constitution with the responsibility of fashioning the best government it is capable of devising for the District of Columbia, notwithstanding the fact that every vestige of popular government was practically eliminated from the plan, suggested the adoption of the present system of government for the District of Columbia. When it acted in the discharge of this solemn duty, it recognized that there were defects in the plan adopted.

Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the time has not yet arrived when the defects in this plan can be remedied. In fact, I know that, for reasons which it is unnecessary for me to state, the principal defect in the plan of government for this District under existing conditions can not be eliminated.

The Commissioners at present, if I may use the term, are an "irresponsible" body. They are not elected by the people, they are not elected by the Congress, as was first suggested by the select committee in their report made in 1878, but they are appointed by the President, and, of course, are responsible only to the President. Our President is a very busy official; either he is attempting to reform the mother tongue by Executive order or directing who shall enter the public schools in California or advising against the dangers of race suicide by intimating to the heads of households in this country how many children should be found therein, so that he has no time to give attention to the affairs of the District of Columbia, and consequently one can see that the Commissioners are practically not responsible to any authority. If it were possible to provide for the election of these Commissioners, adopting in the District of Columbia a suffrage qualification like that existing in South Carolina or Mississippi (or it may be like Massachusetts; as I now recollect the provisions of its constitution, I believe it requires a poll tax and an educational qualification), the principal defect in its plan of government will have been removed. Mr. Chairman, if we could provide for the election of the Commissioners by the people, thereby making them responsible to the people for their action, and then vest them with a larger discretion and a larger power in the management of the affairs of the District, I do not hesitate to say that the Congress of the United States would, in my humble opinion, measure up to the full responsibility that rests upon it to give this city the best government that could be devised by the assembled wise men of the nation. But, Mr. Chairman, we know that this can not be done at this time. I believe in time it will be done, but not Another reason why I think the present arrangement, under which the General Government pays one-half the expense of the District government, is disadvantageous is that it encourages extravagance. There is a condition here found in no other municipality in the country—a condition which seems unlikely to change and, in my opinion, as long as the present arrangement continues, will not change. Every suggestion offered looking to the expenditure of money in connection with the District government is given prompt approval by every person living in the District. I challenge any Member under the sound of my voice to show or to make known if he ever heard of a suggestion made looking to the expenditure of money within the District of Columbia, regardless of what it was for or whether it came from a Republican source, a Democratic source, or a Socialistic source, that was opposed by anybody who lived within the limits of the District of Columbia.

And why should they? They bear only one-half the burden of the expenditure to be made, and inasmuch as the inhabitants of the District are to be the beneficiaries of the whole expenditure, why of course they are not opposed to it.

It is natural, perfectly natural, and I do not think the Commissioners of the District are so very blamable when they emphasize their recommendations—as they always do—for the rapidly increasing appropriations called for to support the city government. I have been impressed with the earnest desire of the Commissioners to make their estimates just as close as possible so as to cover the maximum of revenue to be raised within the District, multiplied by two, thus reaching as far into the Treasury as they can.

The necessity for economy as far as the District people are concerned is rarely voiced in the room where the bill under consideration is prepared—and naturally so. To illustrate my meaning: Suppose the improvement of a street is under consideration. In any other city the controlling idea would be, first, what is necessary to be done; second, how can the improvement be most economically made? Here the idea seems to be, let's have the finest possible improvement made, because we are paying only half, and when we secure this we will not have then paid as our part as much as a cheaper improvement would have cost if we were bearing the cost of it alone. Naturally this tends to extravagance, as every thoughtful person must admit.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, in this District the taxpayer is relieved of many burdens imposed on those living in other cities. Here they are not called upon to aid in the support of a duplicate or triplicate set of officials as residents of other cities are; they have no machinery of State government or county government to maintain, and, moreover, for some unknown reason, the taxpayer here escapes a part of the burden of taxation laid on residents of municipalities elsewhere, as I understand it. Here a tax is laid on real estate and household effects (with certain exemptions) and tangible personal property. No tax is laid on moneys, credits, notes, mortgages, stocks, or bonds. And the truth is, if this condition continues, in my opinion this city will become a veritable place of refuge for the tax dodgers of our country. It is said they are already beginning to gather here. Time and time again attention has been directed to this matter, but nothing has been done. I repeat, with all these favorable conditions the residents of the District naturally favor large appropriations for the District, as the burden of paying their share of same rests but lightly upon them.

I do not hesitate to say, Mr. Chairman, that in my judgment the time has come for a readjustment of the financial arrangement between the General Government and the District of Columbia. At the time that the bill providing for the so-called permanent system of government for the District of Columbia" was under consideration, the contention was made that because the value of the real property owned by the citizens of the District of Columbia and the property owned by the General Government was approximately the same—the value owned by the Government at that time being estimated at $96,000,000, as I now recollect it, and the real property owned by the individual citizens, real estate, at $95,000,000—the expenses of the District Government should be borne equally by the General Government and the District. But in estimating the property owned by the General Government, the value of the streets and avenues was estimated and added to the value of the lots and squares owned by the Government for public purposes, and it was upon that basis that the contention was made that the District of Columbia should only share one-half the burden of the expense of maintaining the District government. of this contention is manifest to any fair-minded person.

The contention at that time was also made or, rather, plea was put forward, that the General Government should assume 50 per cent of the expenses of the District government because the bonded indebtedness of the city had become so great under the government imposed upon it by Congress that with the levy of the maximum tax authorized by the bill it would provide only sufficient revenue to meet the interest on its bonded indebtedness and maintain the public schools, and consequently there was an absolute necessity for the General Government to shoulder one-half of the burden of the District government.

Notwithstanding these misleading contentions and baseless pleas, we find that at that time some of the most thoughtful men in Congress protested against fixing 50 per cent as the part the General Government should bear of the District government expenses.

A glance at the roll call, where they registered themselves against it, will show that among them were Mr. Reed, of Maine; Mr. Blount, of Georgia; Mr. Cox, of New York, and Mr. Reagan, of Texas, who, with many others, contended that 25 per cent was a sufficient amount for the Government to pay toward this city's general expenses.
